EUROPEAN NEWS.

Letters from Our Correspondents in London and Florence.

Effects of Mazzinian Agitation in Italy.

The Temporal Power—Grand Ceremonies in Rome.

The Latest Parisian Scandal and Tragedy.

The Inman steamship City of Antwerp, from Liverpool, April 7, and Queenstown, April 8, arrived at this port yesterday, with two days' later news than was previously at hand.

The marriage of Lady MARY HAMILTON, daughter of the Duchess (née Princess) MARY of Baden, with Prince FREDERICK of HOHENZOLLERN, which was originally appointed to take place at Baden in the course of the present month, had been postponed until June.

The Progrès, of Lyons, says: "The project of an Exhibition in this city, for 1871, is again revived. This time the question is not an affair got up hastily, and for which the Cours and Place Napoleon was a sufficient site; nor is the city to be asked for a subvention of 4,500,000 francs. The authors of the new project only ask for the extra sum which the octroi duties may produce during the time the exhibition is open. These terms are said to meet with no objections. The place selected is the park of the Tête d'Or, and it would be marvelously suitable for such a purpose. The proximity of the lake would facilitate the display of all nautical matters; the greenhouses and gardens would be all ready for the horticultural show, which would take place at the same time. According to the present proposal not one avenue in the park would be disturbed, nor a tree cut down."

Typhus fever, which has so long prevailed at Brussels, seems at last to be on the decline. Its ravages have, however, been very severe. During the month of February the total number of deaths from all causes in the city was 718. This was 255 more than in the previous month, and 498 more than the average of former years in February. Of these deaths no fewer than 320 were from typhus fever. Last month there were only 163 deaths from the same disease. Very few fresh cases have occurred since the latter part of March.

The North German Gazette quotes the following passage from a correspondent of the Paris Temps, with strong expressions of denial and reprobation: "We learn from a good source," says this veracious writer, "that the mobilization of the Prussian army will be ended on the 1st of June. All the necessary preparations are now being made. We have also been informed that the commanders of all the corps stationed in the frontier provinces of the North German Confederation have received sealed orders. In Darmstadt the greatest activity prevails in the arsenals and magazines!!" Not a word of this, adds the Berlin journal, is correct.

The Florence journals announce that M. JEAN MACÉ, the author of the Histoire d'une Bouchée de Pain, and the promoter of the Instruction League in France, is at present in that capital, and is about to establish a similar institution there.

The London Star hears from Berlin that the first diplomatic notes have been dispatched to the Tuileries, as the opening of the diplomatic campaign which will be the prelude of the long-expected war. M. DE BISMARCK, says that journal, still hopes to attract Russia into the Prussian alliance, and thus excite an uprising in the East, which would compel France to divide her military forces, and thus render her an easy prey to Prussian needle-guns.

Two monitors of 400 tons each, built in France for the Sultan, had touched at Malta, on their way to Constantinople.

A St. Petersburg letter says: "The reform of the Russian army, placed on the order of the day since the campaign of 1866, is at last on the point of being realized. A Committee has been formed at the Ministry of War to examine the Prussian regulations concerning the use for military operations of railways and navigable canals. The rapidity with which the Prussian troops moved in 1866 has opened all eyes to 'the enormous strategical importance of railroads.' The Russian soldiers, following the example of their neighbors, ought to be familiarized with the method of directing the trains, so that the service may at any moment be exclusively intrusted them, to the staff being almost every where of German origin. The corps of officers is also to be reformed."

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

British Bribery and Corruption—New Elections—The Anglo-American Mails—Volunteer Review at Dover—Commercial Morality—Pretensions of Ritualism—Army and Navy Expenses—Seed from Australia.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, April 3, 1869.

In several towns where members have been unseated for corrupt practices new elections have just been held, and in every case but one, the sons, or brothers, heirs or assigns of the unseated members have been elected by increased majorities—showing that all the bribed voters stayed bribed, and that there is even a certain amount of popular indignation against the punishment of the bribers. And they want the ballot to protect these voters! The single case in which a new election has reversed the former one was that of Sir SIDNEY WATERLOW, who lost his seat in Scotland by some blunder in not soon enough transferring his interest in certain Government contracts. He has been defeated, and a Conservative elected in his place, which I regret, for he is an active, enterprising, intelligent and really philanthropic man of business, the proprietor of model dwelling-houses and other London improvements. But look at the solemn farce of these bribery punishments. One of the Lords Justices goes in state, at great cost takes evidence, and decides that a member has lost his seat by undue influence, intimidation, bribery and corruption. So far, so good. A week after a new writ is issued, and the same constituency elects his son in his place. The liberal, whole-souled father is made a martyr of, and public sympathy increases the son's majority—or, if you like, the bribed and intimidated stay bribed and frightened, and they hire or frighten a few more to make a sure thing of it! O wondrous system of extracting the wisdom of the people by counting their noses; getting the hidden essence of the people from thirty millions of people—"mostly fools," as CARLYLE carefully adds every time, in his immortal writings on the suffrage question.

Out of this essence of popular wisdom so extracted by pressure, gentle coaxing, the attraction of the precious metals and a plentiful infusion of gin and beer, comes the omnipotence of the nation assembled in Parliament, which chooses it to deal heroically and effectually with the disestablishment and disendowment of churches—to withdraw the authority and supreme headship of the Crown—bishop-making power of Prime Ministers—and, at the same time take back the endowments, and seize upon all the [illegible] Church has had from one quarter. For the Church is divorced and robbed of her dowry. It comes to that. If there had ever been any real and right relation between them, what Mr. GLADSTONE is doing in the gentlest and mildest way he can, would be an awful sacrilege. It is done because the country now believes that the marriage of the State to the Irish Church—going no farther now—was a sham marriage, that notwithstanding it had existed, and should now be declared null and void. The Irish Church, so to say, has never been the true bride of the State—only a very costly, useless, and at last troublesome kept mistress, and now the improper connection is to be ended—but Madame is to have a liberal allowance, and be encouraged to set up housekeeping for herself and live respectable. That is what Mr. GLADSTONE is doing. And, aided by a Parliament which has the omnipotence of popular suffrage, however obtained, he can do it, for "Parliament," the highest authority assures us, "may equally deal with a society and with its property, because Parliament may equally deal with everything. Its own sense of what is just and expedient is, in the nature of things, the only limit which can be put upon the will of a supreme governing power."

You may possibly think the comparison I have made above is rather strong. I believe it is Scriptural, and it shows both sides of the case. There are certain characteristic traits by which persons and institutions may be judged. Sir JOHN GRAY, in the debate on the second reading, threw a ray of light on the question, by pointing out that the representatives of Irish Bishops were now actually enjoying vast tracts of Church lands at nominal rents, obtained by jobbery and nepotism—a far greater spoliation than anything proposed by the bill, and that without any protest from the Conservative benches. Is it not somewhat in this way that certain ladies manage to take care of their relations?

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN MAILS.

The mail contracts made by the Post Office Department with the Cunard and Inman lines of steamers for eight years' service, at a heavy cost, have been reported against by a committee appointed to examine them, and they recommended that they should be annulled, and compensation awarded to the contractors. It is this contract that has chiefly stood in the way of Mr. BURRITT's and Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON's universal war panacea and peace elixir—ocean penny postage. The arguments for the contracts were that these and high subsidies alone could secure regular and rapid mail conveyance at all seasons; that without such contracts the owners would consult their own convenience and the requirements of trade. The Committee, however, finds that the competition for the mail carriage will probably secure all the speed and regularity necessary, and allow of considerable reductions in postage. There may well be such reductions, for the receipts from the Post Office last year were more than four and a half millions sterling. There is, however, no franking system in England, and the Post Office Department charges the other departments with the carriage of every document sent "on Her Majesty's service." This charge amounted last year to nearly a million of dollars. I believe, however, that the contracts will stand, and two new Cunarders have been contracted for.

But the postage in England, after all the reforms of ROWLAND HILL, is in many respects oppressive and absurd. A newspaper which costs a cent is two cents postage. Thus a large, well-filled weekly paper costs you but fifty-two cents a year, but if you get it by mail it costs you just three times as much. The lively Echo, daily, costs $3 10 a year; by mail it is $9 50. The smallest printed circular is two cents. A letter to Germany is twelve cents, and to Paris, or even to Boulogne, in sight of the English coast, you must pay eight cents—say a dime—and for only a quarter of an ounce, because the English Post Office will not get weights of a third of an ounce or the French standard. If a barrel of letters can be carried as cheaply as a barrel of flour, it need not cost twelve cents to get half an ounce to New-York. On the other hand, the English Post carries four ounces of book, papers, manuscript or corrected proof for a penny, a great convenience to poor scribblers, who can send their articles to one magazine after another, until at last, when worn to shreds, they are appreciated and accepted. I know an American lady who has sent an article "the rounds" for weary weeks in this way, and then got $60 or $80 for it, which she greatly needed. But the postage on manuscript, sent from America to my care sometimes, is something frightful for a poor author to contemplate.

High as the rate of postage is here on circulars, many wish it was higher. Every person supposed to have money to spare is flooded with them. Churches, charitable societies, insurance companies and tradesmen of all sorts load down the mails and overwhelm the letter-boxes. It is not an uncommon thing for a single begging enterprise to spend a thousand dollars in postage. The amount received by the Department during the late political canvass was something enormous.

VOLUNTEER REVIEW AT DOVER.

The volunteer review at Dover, on Easter Monday, was unfortunate. Twenty thousand volunteers went down to the coast with promptitude and order, but met one of the wild storms for which that coast is famous. The sham fight came off at last, ships, castle and troops, but one of the small vessels was wrecked against the pier, and the fight, in a military point of view, was not very satisfactory. One military critic assures us that "all the faults of last year were aggravated;" that a real battle fought in any such fashion was certain to be lost; that the men, though excellent material for soldiers, and each of them as brave as JULIUS CÆSAR, (who, it is now decided, never landed on this coast at all,) are quite wanting in discipline, or any idea beyond company drill and sharpshooting. A poor rabbit started during the review and ran down the lines, and the critic, with infinite soldierly disgust, saw the men leave their lines run after the rabbit, strike at it with their costly rifles, and one brave soldier threw his rifle at poor puss, then in the supposed presence of the enemy. He certainly, in this sham fight, deserved a sham court-martial, which would have sentenced him to be shot with a blank cartridge. One paper says "the inefficiency of the officers was flagrant and disgraceful."

BRITISH COMMERCIAL MORALITY.

A curious illustration of the rotten condition of British commercial morality recently came before Parliament, in connection with the seed trade, which is very large and important. It appears that it is the custom of the whole trade to adulterate turnip, clover, and perhaps other seeds. Cheap German rape seed is imported in large quantities, steamed to destroy its vitality and avoid detection, and mixed to the extent, ordinarily, of one-third with English turnip seed. Dead and dyed seed are mixed with clover. In vain have the more respectable members of the trade endeavored to put a stop to this stupid fraud. They were compelled to practice it, by the laws of trade, compelled to do as the others did or lose their custom, and now they appeal to Parliament to enable them to be honest, by punishing rascality. But Mr. BRIGHT and his school of let-alone politics oppose any interference. They hold that such matters, and, I presume, tailoring and swindling generally, will regulate themselves. The way they do so at present is this: A few rascals in any trade or manufacture compel the whole trade to dishonesty. One dealer who lowers his price by shortening his measures or extending his goods, (with cyclas,) drives the others into the same iniquity; and so it goes on, from one trade to another, and even from bad to worse, without any visible amendment. We buy cotton for silk and wool, starch and clay for cotton, alum and chalk in bread. Water is worse in milk, [illegible] sugar for coffee, trash for tea, and cheaply everywhere.

The Saturday Review, getting practical, and not sorry for an excuse to find fault with Mr. BRIGHT, asks:

"Why is not the supervision of weights and measures made a matter of police, and not of municipal regulation? and why should not the Magistrates be compelled to publish these lists? [of offenders.] The whole thing ought to be taken out of the hands of these wretched vestries. No, says Mr. BRIGHT; trade would be impossible if we interfered. They interfere in France, they interfere in Prussia, they interfere everywhere where it is admitted to be one of the first duties of Government to protect the poor and ignorant and starving; and even where law is halting, and it is difficult to reach offenders in a thinly populated country such as America, the law of Lynch supplements the statutes. But in England the British tradesman ought not to stand this. Better shut up his shutters than submit to the degradation of honest dealing. * * Mr. BRIGHT's retailer not only cheats, but must cheat, and must not be interfered with in his cheating. We regret to say that there is much truth in this. The lower you descend in trade, the less economical and the more unsound is its working. The small retail tradesman has no capital, or only such as he borrows at an extravagant price; the retail publican is much in the same condition. They deal in perishable articles; they are bound to give credit; they are open to competition; the money that they have is not enough to pay interest, to remunerate their own labor, and to keep their families; and adulteration and false weights are their only resource. Humanitarians will say that if you throw additional difficulties on the small retailer, you are suppressing a useful element in society. This is just what we deny. We believe that the public good, and the true interests of trade, would be advanced by diminishing retail trade as it is now carried on in poor neighborhoods, and that both vendors and consumers would be benefited by improving a good many retailers from off the face of the town."

As the vestries are made up of and elected by these very cheating shopkeepers, it is of course quite hopeless that they should expose or punish each other. And when you have "a nation of shopkeepers," and they all adulterate and all cheat, what can you possibly do about it? Go to Parliament? Why the shopkeepers elect the House of Commons, and get themselves elected as soon as they have cheated enough to afford it. As I before remarked, what England wants first and chiefly is a Government.

PRETENSIONS OF RITUALISM.

I cannot see that Ritualism has abated a jot of its pretensions on account of the recent decision, but the contrary. One of their writers urges that the Anglican Bishops should go to Rome, present themselves at the Council, and have the validity of their consecrations passed upon. Some favor rather a union at first with the Eastern Church—but the Church of England is much nearer to Rome, was planted by Rome, was faithful to Rome for centuries after the Eastern branch had been severed. The fight now is with Protestantism—the first work to get well rid of that. Protestantism and Catholicism are declared to be "two distinct religions battling for supremacy within the Church of England." The Catholic Party declares that the Church was before and is above the Bible—the Protestants hold that it is the Bible on which the Church is founded. So they part company at the first step. Until printing was discovered, say the Ritualists, Protestantism was impossible, but the Church existed, wide-spread and in full power before the Bible, as now constituted, was in existence. With Protestants, the visible Church is an infinitesimal minority of so-called Christendom—for most of them exclude the entire Roman Catholic and Greek communion, and many scarcely admit the Anglicans.

"Protestantism has never," says a Ritualist organ, "since its first outbreak, succeeded in propagating itself in any way save by marriage. Its missions have been, each and all, hopeless and irremediable failures. It has not—America excepted—cover half the ground it did while MELANCTHON was still alive, and it is decrepit and disintegrated in its chosen homes."

As the Irish Church is Anti-Papal, Scriptural and so Low Church as to rank itself with Presbyterians, its disestablishment gets no pity. "Serves them right," is the unanimous Ritualistic verdict. It is averred that out of the two thousand Protestant Church clergy in Ireland not fifty do what in England would be considered good parish work. Men who have enjoyed rich livings for years have never resided a week in their parishes, spending their time at fashionable watering-places, and preaching against the errors of Popery. Exclusive of cathedrals, there are not twelve daily services, as required by law, in all Ireland. On the whole clergy list there are only fifty names identified even in the humblest way with literature, and not ten in the fifty are known to English men of letters. Such a clergy deserves disendowment without any compensation whatever.

"Finally," says my Ritualist organ, "endowing a body of clergy which teaches Protestantism (exactly like endowing a hospital where the physicians are all Thugs, and the patients, consequently, sure to be made away with. * * No reform of a necessarily destructive Church which does not accept as its fundamental principle that Protestantism is not only an imposture, but one that has been found out and discarded, as the true source of every sin and every punishment the Irish Church has felt, will be of the smallest use in preserving the life of the disendowed and disestablished communion."

I do not know how far along the American High Church Party has got on this road, but here is where a large number of the most zealous, clever and cultivated English clergy and laity are to-day. They look upon the Reformation as a "most fearful judgment; nay, as a very letting loose of Satan in our midst." I am quoting a Ritualist writer. I cannot think of one prominent Reformer of the sixteenth century who is not now declared to be a scoundrel. This is the theory—here is a glimpse of the practice. The last number of the Church Times has an "Evening Hymn," signed EDWARD HUSBAND, the name of a talented and distinguished clergyman of the Church of England, and here are two of its six stanzas:

"Blessed Mary, Queen of Heaven;
Virgin, Virgin, (ever pure);
Intercede that all who love thee,
May unto the end endure.

Holy saints, Confessors, Martyrs;
White-robed Messengers of Light;
Spirits of the Just made perfect;
Aid us in our life-long fight."

Such men are not troubled about disestablishment. They are too zealous, and too successful in inspiring the zeal of their congregations. They believe the State is an incubus.

"At the present moment," says one, "hundreds of country parishes might be named where the population to all intents and purposes are as heathenish as if no Church existed, and where the several incumbents would resent the approach of any who would endeavor to Christianize the population. When the Church of England is disestablished, we have sufficient faith in the honesty of our statesmen she will not receive worse treatment than that accorded to the Irish Establishment. Bishops with £800 a year are much more likely to be Christians than when possessing as many thousands."

No doubt of that. The English Bishops, with their $25,000 to $50,000 a year, are too heavily weighted. Give them $3,500, and there might be ten times as many. The Bishop of Lincoln complains that if he wished to preach on Sunday in every parish in his diocese, it would take him fifteen years to do it.

ARMY AND NAVY EXPENSES.

The saving to be made in army and navy consoles the payers of income tax for the unexpectedly dear glory of Abyssinia. England has forty-seven armored ships, carrying 400 guns—the French have only thirty-seven iron-clad ships and eleven floating batteries—forty-eight. But England is now building two turret ships, which alone will be able to knock all the rest to flinders; so one asks, what the rest are good for? At any cost England must be ahead of any other nation, and it used to be her rule to be as strong as was any possible combination of other Powers, but that is now too difficult.

The gun-makers of Birmingham are making strong appeals and remonstrances. Their trade is very dull. The Government has established a large and costly gun factory of its own—large enough to injure them, but not large enough, they think, to furnish a new pattern of rifle required in a sudden emergency. For every war, and even considerable danger of war, may be expected to call for new and more efficient arms. The present breech-loader Enfields must be changed for the Martini-Henry rifles, and no one knows what next. But it is a hard case for the Birmingham artisans, and one in which their member, Mr. BRIGHT, cannot help them. He cannot oppose the Government of which he is a member, and he believes in things regulating themselves—even the weights and measures of cheating tradesmen.

FOOD FROM AUSTRALIA.

It is stated that the consumption of fresh beef and mutton put up in tin cans in Australia and sold here at seven pence a pound is increasing so rapidly that 300,000 pounds a week are furnished to the Black country alone. What then is to hinder the great quantities of beef now wasted in South America from being treated in the same fashion? In Chester it is said that many poor people are living now on a little Indian meal and buttermilk—such is the condition of the whole cotton manufacturing region, which a few nights ago was shaken by an earthquake, which drove people from their houses and even threw down one or two chimneys.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Polygraphic Hall, which you may remember, not far from Charing Cross—though I hope not, for its entertainments have been very dry and tiresome—is to be converted into a theatre for comic opera, which means burlesque, with plenty of pretty girls and as small an amount of drapery as the Lord Chamberlain will admit of, which, taking the lack at one extreme in the Court and fashionable society, and in the theatres at the other, has come to be so little as to be scarcely worth mentioning. Theatres are also planned in Piccadilly and Kensington, and there is no reason why any suburb with a population of 200,000 should not have some place of amusement. Theatres with light and amusing pieces are preferred by many people to parties. Only by force of the strongest pious compulsion and aid of magic lanterns and other optical delusions can people be induced to attend lectures, except at the Royal Institution, where they are the fashion. The Crystal Palace on Saturdays, the Zoölogical Gardens on Sundays, and the flirtation flower-shows at the Botanic and Horticultural Gardens draw, of course. A strong sense of religious duty sends people in Holy Week to Exeter Hall to hear the oratorios, and Drury Lane Theatre gets a full house at its Good Friday sacred concert, which people take as they do the inevitable salted cod and hot cross buns, indispensable in popular Ritualism.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

Disturbances in Ancona—Mazzinian Agitation—A Gloomy Situation—The Temporal Power—Religious Ceremonies—Music—The Late American Consul-General—Americans in Florence.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Tuesday, March 30, 1869.

Each week has its sensation, and that of the past has been caused by the disturbances at Ancona and the threatened movement at Palermo. Vague reports were flying about of disaffection in the army, and the revolt in Sicily was to take a republican form and have in view the autonomy of the island. At Naples, many arrests of officers had been made, and even a military pronunciamiento, in opposition to the actual authority, had taken place. But it turns out, as it has so often before, that there was much exaggeration in the reports. Arrests were made, both of soldiers and civilians, but not in such numbers as some of the newspapers would have it. Meetings of members of the party of MAZZINI have lately been held, at which the determination was arrived at to agitate violently, and even strike. It is stated that the chief himself opposed such a resolution, with the expressed opinion that the favorable moment had not arrived. But his advice to wait was overborne by opposite counsels, and he yielded. GARIBALDI and his near followers seemed to have nothing to do with these movements. Milan and Naples are the principal seats of the party of action; indeed, nearly all the journals of the latter city are the organs of the opposition, and these were the ones first to give notice that revolutionary steps were meditated, accompanied with the assurance that nothing could result sufficiently serious to excite alarm. The Government is timid, and is liable to make undue haste in flying to the suppression of imaginary revolt. The efforts of the agents of MAZZINI have been directed in a considerable degree to the object of exciting disaffection in the army, and manifestoes and clandestine publications of various sorts have been distributed. I must say that, so far as these illegal papers have fallen under my eye, they seem to be of an extravagant character, making violent appeals to passions, and exaggerating evils which can as well be cured by the slow process of reform as by sudden revolution.

Such journals as the Riforma, certainly sufficiently radical, have laughed at these real or imaginary plots, and advised the Government not to be too ready to believe that the Republican Party has a hand in every scheme for overturning its authority. The affair at Ancona ended, so far as it yet has any end, in the resignation of their offices by the Mayor and a part of the Municipal Council. The Prefect of that district has refused to accept these resignations, on the ground that they were doing their duty, and only yielded to violence. It is coming to be rather common here for tumultuous street assemblies, by menaces, to turn out of office unpopular public servants.

The Roman emigrants are among the most active of those who take part in new enterprises, and General MENABREA has given notice that no favor will be shown them, if they are found implicated in schemes which can have no other effect but to embarrass the Government.

Neither the Roman, nor any other foreign question, is discussed with as much animation as before. Universal speculation has brought on a general bewilderment, and writers grope their way through a fog of their own raising. Many torches are kindled, but little light is thrown upon a gloomy situation. Some writers fly from Europe to America, and find a momentary solace in presenting, as well as their knowledge will enable them, the new aspect which our affairs have put on. One journal, in commenting upon the message sent by Count BISMARCK to General GRANT, says, somewhat happily: "A parallel between these two illustrious personages would be a work worthy of PLUTARCH, the familiar of the ancient heroes—the acute anatomist of what constitutes true glory. If the historian lived in our day, he would find a theme for one of those immortal comparisons in which he embodied the wisdom of his time—the finest criticism of men and events known to literature."

THE TEMPORAL POWER.

The interests which the ecclesiastics take in the several ceremonies next week at Rome, of which the Pope is the object, increases, and money continues to be contributed.

The Pope is an old man, and may die before work at present laid out is all done. But we should keep in mind that PIUS IX., MASTAI-FERRETTI, comes of a long-lived family. The grandfather of His Holiness lived to the age of 88, his father to 84, and his mother to 92 years. The Pope has two brothers, by name GABRIELO and GAETANO, and one sister, the Countess ISABELLA, all still living, the youngest of whom has reached 82. It is a family of octogenarians, and although the air of Rome may not be as good as that of Sinigaglia, up there on the Adriatic coast, a robust constitution still triumphs over many temporary ills. The Pope's heart is full of gentle and amiable virtues, this all know, but he is capable also, on occasion, of showing himself a man of temper and pluck. More than once, when his anger has been roused, his voice has rang through the Vatican in a style of imperious command which has convinced those who have unreasonably opposed his will that he is conscious of the power which the ecclesiastical conclave has conferred, or imposed, upon him, and that he has the courage to use it.

If accounts received from Rome may be relied upon, Monsignour TALBOT, formerly one of the chamberlains of the Pope, has lost his reason. On his return from England, where he had been to collect money toward paying the cost of a church in construction at Rome, he received a severe rebuke from His Holiness, and was afterward deposed from several offices of trust which he had held. He fell into a morbid state of mind, and afterward, in crossing from Bare to Corfu, became stark mad.

The past week has been one of religious ceremonies, each a reflection of one exhibited, with more stately, but not perhaps more solemn beauty, at Rome. For several days the shops were shut, and business in great part suspended. The wail of miserere is heard in the churches. On the eve that Christ died, and for eight-and-forty hours not a bell is sounded, and the movement of the clocks is stopped. The pictures are covered, the candle-sticks overthrown and the holy water is dashed upon the ground. The cross is veiled, and no visible symbol of hope is left. A religious stillness impresses the imagination and touches the heart. The thoughts are moved to finer issues, and the cold spectator is ready to admit that this drama of church seasons and ceremonies has higher and better influences than were acknowled before. With a hush of reverent expectation we wait with the rest the signal of the resurrection. It comes at last, and from belfry and clock-tower, and from every hearth-side and heart, bursts the great hymn of thanksgiving which proclaims the event.

MUSIC.

A new musical composition by the Florentine composer SMOLCI was performed in Santa Maria Novella with tolerable effect. Not very high praise can be bestowed upon the music now generally heard in Italian churches. The country is full of vocal talent, as it has always been, but it is not turned in the direction of sacred music. Opera music is only that which brings a return in money, and the first expenditure is for that kind of training. In the church is served up a rehash of the music of the stage. Now and then a Palestrian chorus strays away from the Gregorian Chapel, and such solemn strains, without accompaniment, is the best music to be heard in Italy.

THE LATE AMERICAN CONSUL-GENERAL.

Intelligence of the death of Colonel LAWRENCE, our Consul-General in Italy, made a painful impression here among many beyond the limits of the American circle. Colonel LAWRENCE's love of work made him retain an office which could add nothing to his social prestige, as his great private wealth enabled him to live in a style equal to that of the first society in this capital, and to which the revenues of the office could contribute little. In time of business our agent was found at his desk, serving the country with as faithful application to the details of work as any office clerk. By his long residence, and the style of his establishment, Colonel LAWRENCE had become as well known in Florence as almost any foreign Minister, and in more than one place he will be missed. It is but truth to add that the country could not have in a place of trust a more faithful officer.

AMERICANS IN FLORENCE.

Florence is now thronged with Americans, and the season over at Rome, a great many more will be added to the number already here. The hotels are doing better than for some time before, and for two or three months to come there is prospect of good returns. In these the bankers will share, for at their rooms the throngs tread on the heels of each other, as at the counter they give the password, present arms, in the shape of a letter-of-credit, and challenge the cashier to deliver. The weather for some days has been atrocious, and has disappointed those who come here to look at the sky. The great storm, so much talked of, which was to sweep over Europe, keeps the promise, and we are to enjoy whatever benefit it brings. But with the advance of Spring, it is to be hoped, we shall be better off.

ANGELICO.

THE ETERNAL CITY.

Rome in the Holy Week—The Pope's Blessing Urbi et Orbi—Scenes in Streets and Churches.

Correspondence of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Thursday was bright sunshine and blue, and as we came down-stairs all the marbles and stone carvings in the courtyard were glittering in the light. A great golden carriage went by, (it was the hereditary Captain of the Guard driving off to his post.) That was the first sign of the day's festive humiliation, except, by the way, some guns and bells in the early morning. As we drove along, we passed a whole procession of people walking along the narrow streets toward St. Peter's. Black-veiled ladies, carriages, green, blue, red petticoats, coal-black tresses, children in little black veils tripping along, swaddled-up babies held up at the doors to see the sight. These brown friars, white monks, black and white Dominicans, and some strange brown creatures, penitents in huge bonnets, and priests, too, without number, all drifting in the same direction. As we got nearer St. Angelo the carriages came thicker, and all the pretty ladies (they did not, however, look so pretty) were driven by faster and faster. We drive on and on down the quaint beautiful streets, arched, and wrought, and carved; past fountains, where even on days like this the women are watching the water flow into their pitchers heedless of the crowd; past shrines and Mater Dolorosas with sorrowful upturned eyes; past milk merchants, lottery establishments, sausage shops, past Raphael's Palace and the ancient Doge's barn, and iron-worked windows, and open shop arches full of light and darkness, and you come at last to the river and the great bridge of St. Angelo, all alight in the wonderful dazzle. Some one points out the gonfalones streaming from the fort, and quotes the old saying about always meeting a soldier, a priest and a beggar on the bridge. The saying is true enough to-day, as far as priests and soldiers are concerned, but the beggars seem to have dressed themselves, and put on uniform and velvet gowns, and to be coming along with us to the piazza in front of St. Peter's. It is flowing with people; they are squatting on the steps; standing against the great columns in hundreds; and every minute the crowd is growing thicker and closer. There sits a row of peasant women with beautiful red petticoats gleaming in the sun; there stand the monks talking together, with their umbrellas; here are shepherds coming up from the country with cross-barred Italian legs. In Rome itself common people don't dress up any more, unfortunately, and wear trousers instead of the family hour rags and ribbons we all admire. However, country people have not yet abandoned their traditions. There are some dresses left, happily for us sightseers, to admire. There stands one of the Swiss guard in his grand-looking uniform, (Michael Angelo designed it, it is said;) yellow, with stripes of red and black, with a beef-eater's cap and halberd. We come into St. Peters, and presently one of these grand-looking creatures bars our passage, and silently motions us to turn back to a place where everybody is crowding round a little scarlety door, protected by a handsome young Zouave officer.

Great St. Peter's is strangely decorated for the occasions with crimson stages and hangings, and sorts of pens or raised stands full of the veiled ladies whom we have seen arriving by every winding street and spacious place. Common people are strolling about hand in hand, numberless Zouaves in their blue picturesque dress, and again more monks and priests. It is very like the scene outside, only the great dome is overhead and the carved walls and windows about us, and many people are on their knees specially round the statue of the bronze St. Peter with his key and his shining toe. We persuade the officer of the guard as the turret door to let us in just before the crush, and we climb the broad shallow steps. Figures out of the picture galleries meet us at every corner. Here is a plum-colored clerk, slashed and square-toed, waiting to take the favored yellow dickets; and at the top of the stairs a Vandyke, gallantly standing, velvet cloak, ruffle, golden chain, with one hand on the sword's hilt, and black silk legs. This is a handsome American General, who has been appointed Cameriere Segreto, and who takes us under his protection. He tells us that if we will swear by saints to secrecy he will open at the back of the pens, which are also here for the use of the veiled ladies, he will provide for us in time. In this little secret passage we wait patiently, and well amused. All sorts of strange figures flit past, the great Swiss guards bearing down upon us; a little uneasy violet priest, with a muslin petticoat, darted here and there in an agony to find a corner for himself; more Vandykes, then tippets and red and violet caps, and then there is a pause, we see a little bustle at the far end of the passage; three or four priests in white fur capes, attended by their acolytes, hurry by without noticing us; some huge waving things appear above the pens. "There are the Pope's fans," says my companion; "he is coming to bless the people outside. Listen!" And then in the dead silence which suddenly seems to overpower all the countless sounds and glitterings and echoings everywhere about, we stand listening as a clear voice not far away repeats some few words to which comes a thundering amen from the priests. Again the voice speaks. Again the amen fires off, and then a quavering old man's voice utters something—a blessing—upon the patient crowds waiting down below. It is with an odd feeling of touched bewilderment that one stands silent, listening to the faded voice blessing the kneeling multitude. As it ceases the guns begin to fire and the bells to ring.

After the blessing came the curse; a crash, a scream, all barriers broken down along our little secret passage, a sudden overwhelming torrent pouring over everything, charging the Swiss guard, setting aside the indignant Vandykes. "I see! Imperitinence!" I hear them crying in fierce indignation. The ladies don't care; they come on laughing and running with dauntless courage, and begin to hop and scramble into their places; the place echoes, then pens creak, and still the ladies pour in. Some have cavaliers, fine old gentlemen, with orders; some have tickets, some have none. We are installed in our places by this time, and watch them pass before us. The diplomatic corps now marches up, swords and light and embroidered coats, the white Austrian uniforms and the beautiful Hungarian dress. Little by little this human sea flows into the dykes and dams and locks which have been provided, and we begin to look at the spectacle we have come to see. In this beautiful light hall of the Vatican a stage has been raised, upon which a table is spread; as well as I can make out all the cakes and puddings and fruit seem to be of gold, but now immediately a procession passes, damask and stately servitors bearing food and wine, and then come in thirteen white figures with tall white caps upon their heads; these are the priests whose feet have been washed, down below, by the Pope, and who are now to be served at table by him. They are surrounded by a stream of prelates and damask attendants. I see the old Pontiff bending as he serves; cold fish and cold vegetables is the fare provided. It is too far off to distinguish very plainly what is going on, only this, a long table glittering, quaint figures sitting at it, a Pope serving, and robed and splendid figures looking on. PAUL VERONESE, RAPHAEL and others painted from their own time, and have left us records of what they saw round about them, and here is time going back and our curious critical and yet charmed eyes see as they saw, and the stately past is before us. This was not the first collation of the day, at 8 o'clock the comerieres and other officials had been treated to ices and coffee.

Later in the afternoon we went to the Miserere in the Sixtine Chapel, and still by favor of a kind cameriere segreto we were admitted, just before the lamentation began, to a dim arched place where many people were waiting, and some lights burning, and daylight streaming through the windows upon MICHAEL ANGELO's great prophets and sybils, and upon the magnificent creation of man, a fresco high up in the roof with a mountain height feeling about it, that takes one away out of the chapel and beyond the angels and devils painted on the walls. We had all got quite used to our black veils by this time, and we listened, as we looked, all in rows, to the chanting, which at first disappointed me. The Pope did not come that afternoon, and his throne stood empty, but the service went on and on, and presently some of the lights were put out, and the chanting seemed to thrill a little and then go on and on once more, and then some more lights went out, and with the last the chanting stopped short, and new began a melody so strange, so sad, so carefully sweet, so utterly unlike anything I had ever in my life listened to before, that I do not know how to write of it; and, still, strange and shrill, it deepened and died away, and seemed soaring to those very mountain heights which are dimly reflected in the fresco overhead; the secret of life seemed to be in its voice if one could only understand. It did not sound so much like singing as like the playing of one violincellist, whose name is familiar to us all, sadder and more sad in the gray of the sunset, from which all the gold had died away. At last came one note of hope, only one, and as we all listened for more the music stopped and the Miserere was over. We came out into the Sala Regia of the Vatican, dark figures crowding, awestricken and touched by this wonderful service. Except in the sepulchres, no lights are allowed in the churches till Easter, nor do bells ring any more.

FRANCE.

The Latest Parisian Scandal and Tragedy.

Paris (April 4) Correspondence Morning Star.

I have hitherto refrained from commenting on the scandal which has occupied the great world of Paris for the last week, from discretion; but, as the tale has now appeared in every paper, reserve on my part will not shield the families concerned from the publicity now attached to the affair. The husband of the lady bore a name well known in the annals of the First Empire, but, on his marriage, added the more ancient one of his wife to his own. The Marquise C——— DE F. is the mother of four little children. In society she met and encouraged the advances of Commandant THEVE, a married man, but separated from his wife, and possessed of considerable fortune. The intimacy is said to have lasted six months. M. THEVE suddenly learnt that an officer in his own corps shared the heart of the marquise. Resolved on vengeance, he certainly devised the most frightful scheme that the human mind is capable of. Determined to prove to his brother officer that he had the marquise completely in his power, he summoned her to his barrack-room. What passed during the interval of her arrival and the moment when a shot, heard from within the locked doors of his apartment, attracted the attention of the officers in the neighboring rooms, is not known, but on bursting open the door, the marquise, partially undressed, and bearing marks of a recent struggle, pointed to a bleeding corpse lying on the bed. Commandant THEVE had shot himself through the heart. An hour later his son, a young man of seventeen, came to the barracks to see his father. He was, however, prevented from entering the room where the body lay till the event had been broken to him by the brother officers of his father. M. THEVE was a man of forty; the marquise is about thirty. M. THEVE was buried on Wednesday without military honors, which in France are not granted to suicides.

AFFAIRS IN CANADA.

The Opening of the Dominion Parliament—The Debate on the Address—Annexation Sentiment—A Great Scandal.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Saturday, April 17, 1869.

The opening of the Dominion Parliament, which had been looked for with a considerable degree of interest, took place on Thursday last, with the usual amount of ceremony. The attendance of members was rather limited, but the event passed off with great éclat. Much credit is given to Sir JOHN YOUNG, for the appearance he made as the representative of royalty, and his reading of the speech appears to have been greatly admired. The fact is, His Excellency is a man of more than ordinary ability, and great things are expected from his administration of the affairs of the country. Differing from his predecessors, he assumed a greater share of responsibility in the preparation of the speech, and took occasion to express his own opinions rather more freely than is usually the case with the head of the Government. The speech is regarded as a model of its kind, and it certainly is when compared with others; but there is really nothing in it above the common, for it simply alludes to the proposed legislation of the session, but makes no recommendation of any kind, not even suggesting any particular course on the Hudson's Bay question, or intimating a Ministerial measure. It is utterly barren of results, and is probably the wordiest and the most insignificant speech ever delivered from the Throne by any Governor-General of Canada. The fault is not Sir JOHN YOUNG's, but of his Ministers, who appear to have been at a loss what to say for themselves. Not a single measure do they indicate positively, for the simple reason that they have not hit upon a programme for the session. It was certainly expected that the Governor-General would mention the intention of the Government to introduce a bill for the transfer of the North-west Territory, but they are silent on

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By GEORGE C. SCOTT. (New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.)

Fishing is no longer all poetry and philosophy. Anglers do not "go a-fishing" nowadays with simple rod and line and hook for the pleasure and sport of the exercise. Lovers of the "gentle craft," and knights of the rod and line who have also an itching to wield that other shooter but mightier rod with a steel pen, and not a steel hook attached, do not write dreamily and vaguely of the delights of the sport alone. They are no longer of the type of the "melancholy Jacques" or poetical WALTON, who, with a peculiar melancholy of their own, wander by brooks and through wood, and give to the world their ruminations, often melancholy enough in volumes which only poets read, and practical fishermen can neither enjoy nor comprehend. On the contrary, the modern angler is by nature more of the mind of the poacher than the poet. The simple rod and hook do not content him; but, armed aggressively at all points with every deadly instrument that art can devise, and defensively with every delicacy that lunch-baskets can contain, he sallies forth by railway, fully booked and thumbstalled, to the sea-shore, where, instead of withdrawing to secluded spots to fish and dream alone and undisturbed, he hires boats and attendants, whom he calls "gaffers," and remorselessly prepares and proceeds to slaughter not to fish. Poor IZAAK WALTON would be disgusted with the fishermen and sportsmen of the day; a "blue fish squid," a "swivel sinker," an "artificial fly," or a "Robinson splice," would appear in his eyes as horrible devices as a Colt's revolver or a Dahlgren gun; and he would as heartily avoid the modern sportsman as the practical fishermen of the day shun his book. The present tendency is to large messes of fish rather than long meditations; and readers of sporting-books want facts about the game rather than philosophizing on a future state.

Mr. SCOTT clearly understands and appreciates the practical tendency of the anglers and of angling. Of late years fishing in American waters has become a most important and material interest, employing a vast capital and affording a livelihood and profit to a great number of persons. The culture as well as the catching of fish is commanding attention; information is being sought in all directions and from all sources, and laws are being enacted and commissions created in the interest of piscicculture. Mr. SCOTT's book is a contribution in this direction—it is meant for the information of the public. The Fish Commissioners in this country, anxious to restock the rivers of America with fish food, as England and France have done theirs, have found that the general ignorance of the people and of our legislators has been the greatest obstacle to success. Mr. SCOTT's book is meant and is admirably adapted to the education of the people in this direction. He has given in this handsome volume what is really the best and most practical contribution to this class of literature ever published in America. It may not appear to the more critical as entertaining as the works of BUCKLAND, nor as pleasant reading to the multitude as ROOSEVELT'S Superior Fishing, nor as informing and suggestive to practical and experienced pisciculturists and naturalists as the ample contributions of FRANCIS FRANCIS; but to the great majority of sportsmen and commercial fishermen, and to the general public, this volume is worth more than all the others combined. It is calculated to educate precisely the class of people who need education in this direction.

The volume of Mr. SCOTT might be appropriately termed a hand-book of the art; it is certainly full and complete in its practical information, if not perfect in its arrangement. A person acquainted with the subject, and having an eye for arrangement, with phrenological indication of "order" fully developed in his head, would have transposed some of the chapters and parts of the book, but the reader who is seeking information will find the arrangement of Mr. SCOTT has its advantages as well as defects. The five parts of the book as arranged treat of—I. Coast and Estuary Fishing with rod and line; II. Fresh Water Fishing with fly and bait; III. Commercial Fisheries; IV. Ancient and Modern Fish Culture; V. A Glimpse of Ichthyology.

The latter part is really a synopsis of all the others, for in the first parts are unavoidably introduced pretty full accounts of the principal individuals of the various families. It appears to have been written and added for the sake of using a number of very beautiful and valuable wood cuts of fishes arranged in families. The drawings to all appearance have been drawn from life and engraved with the greatest care by the most skillful artists. They are almost invaluable to any student of natural history, particularly as they illustrate reliably a branch of that study in which we are naturally deficient. In the other parts, a little out of the natural order of arrangement, the ichthyologist, will also find other well-drawn and elaborately finished cuts of various fishes. And without furnishing anything new to naturalists Mr. SCOTT has embodied in his volume all the natural history of those various fishes which will be of use or interest to the general student. Some of his conclusions on disputed points may be questioned by naturalists; for others he does not always give the best authority or best reasons; and in giving others we do not always know whether he is in earnest or not. Among the curious and interesting statements which belong to the latter category is the following:

"On a recent occasion, while with MATTESON the artist, he informed me of the experience of Dr. WHITE, one of the principal physicians in the central part of New-York State, in fishing for horned pout, known throughout the country as bullheads. The doctor, having a taste for angling, which he indulged whenever the condition of his patients permitted, was on his return homeward from visiting a patient, when a Summer shower reminded him that it would sharpen the appetite of the bullheads in the river which he was approaching, and he therefore reined up under a shed near the river, hitched his horse, cut an ash pole, found a line armed with a hook and sinker in his pocket, dug some angle-worms, and forthwith went a-fishing. There was a point mouted at the stone, and, leaving it anchored to the side of the stream, he stepped into it and began to fish. The bullheads put in an appearance immediately, so that within half an hour he had taken some two dozen fish, and as fast as he took them he cast them on the grassy bank of the shore. Having a pretty fondness, he cut a switch and went to string them, when not one was to be found. This surprised the doctor, and he at once concluded to solve the mystery, and so commenced fishing again, and throwing the fish on the shore as he had before done, but keeping a sly watch of them. After he had cast the fourth one, a large bullfrog leaped from the water, took hold of the bullhead, and rolled into the water with it; leaping out immediately, and taking another fish, he rolled in as before, and so continued until he had returned the four to the water. The doctor continued fishing, and as fast as he had cast three or four fish on shore the bullfrog returned and helped them back into the river. As Dr. WHITE is an educated gentleman, who enjoys the confidence of a very wide professional and intellectual connection, I feel assured of the truth of the foregoing incident, and therefore report the case for Professor AGASSIZ or some other naturalist, with the view to a learned decision as to the nature of the link which connects the bullhead and frog."

The bullfrog could not have helped the bullheads back to the stream to feed on them, for the spiked dorsal and pectorals of the latter forbid it. Even the pike—the most voracious fresh-water fish in the world, excepting the siluru, which is a species of catfish—is deterred from the attempt. The important question for the naturalist is, why did the bullfrog help the bullhead? Does the celestial quality of charity influence the lower strata of vertebrates?"

The important question for the reader is, Whose joke is this; that of Dr. WHITE on MATTESON, MATTESON on SCOTT, or SCOTT on the reader? We are inclined to think the latter. If Mr. SCOTT will prove it no joke we shall apologize for our want of faith as humbly and fully as the Canaris hand-line fisherman for sheepshead did for laughing at his first operations with rod and reel, or as the shed fishermen at Holyoke did for sneering at SETH GREEN'S declaration that he could hatch a million shad a day in his boxes when they saw him turn loose six millions a day.

Running through the several parts of the book are minute directions as to localities, tackle and bait for angling, and these the practiced angler will generally recognize as just, and the amateur will find highly valuable. These directions are accompanied by elaborate engravings and diagrams of hooks, lines, reels, flies and other tackle. And in spite of their nature these illustrated descriptions are not dry reading. By the liberal use of anecdote and incident Mr. SCOTT contrives to make them highly interesting, and generally very valuable. These incidents sometimes take the form of narrations or dialogues, descriptive of actual experiences in various parts of the country—a vein of information running through the whole and adding zest to the narrative, though not always introduced in the most artistic manner. But they serve to introduce to the reader and interest him in the characters who haunt the favorite fishing waters of the Northeast and Canada. He gets up a pleasant glimpse of club life on the sea-shore and lakes of the same region, and is carried by the narrative into a social field which will be new to most of the readers for whom this volume is intended. A pleasing example of Mr. SCOTT'S style, an interesting incident not without information to amateur anglers for trout, and a charming picture of the fisherman's camp life, will be found in the following account of Middle Dam Camp, to be found complete on page 181:

"This camp is situated at the head of Rapid River, and at the foot of Mollychunkemunk Lake, being the next lake east of the Umbagog, in a chain of a dozen lakes, in the State of Maine, which head near the mountains separating that State from Canada. Rapid River falls into Umbagog Lake, and as this is a famous trouting region, I give a view of the camp, where the angler luxuriates on brook trout and spruce partridges, and rests from his day's labor on a spring bed. Trout of nine pounds' weight each have been taken there, though I never took one that scaled over six pounds. It was here that I met a new experience in the character of trout, and think it worth relating for the benefit of anglers.

While I believe that trout are not generally so discriminating in the selection of artificial flies as to evince acuteness of vision, yet I have experienced that at certain waters, when the streams are low and clear, a copy of the living fly is more or less necessary to success. This is the case at the pool and rapids below the middle dam at the head of Rapid River, and half a mile below Middle Dam Camp, where a large school of apparently estimated trout keep leaping and tumbling so that from fifty to a hundred speckled beauties of from two to five pounds weight are always in sight. But it used to be said that they would not take an artificial fly; so, school-boy like, the guests at the camp sent every angler, on his arrival, to "fry below the dam" as a sell. It pleased them to see a fresh man's face glow at the first sight of those sportive beauties, which acted as if half in coquetry and half in defiance of anglers. I felt thankful when witnessing the self-denying hospitality which prompted several anglers, who were entire strangers to me, to cease angling opposite the camp for the sole purpose of showing me a pool full of very anxious trout. They left after I had tried in vain to coax a favorable notice at one cast of flies. I changed my cast several times, and then rested the pool to allow them to change their minds or what their appetites, until I devoted in that way about two days, to the amusement of the anglers at the camp, and finally began to think that the stories I had heard about the sagacity of these trout were true. In my return to camp after each trial below the dam, I saw that my brethren of the angle were interested in my efforts by the furtive glances and sly winks at each other as they anxiously inquired what sport I had enjoyed. But all their jokes fell short, for my mind was with the sparkling beauties below the dam. After having exhausted my fly-books of their attractive lures, I concluded to repair to the dam and study the trout. There they were, apparently as jolly as ever, rolling, tumbling, and leaping along the surface of the clear, curling pool. I had not sat long on the dam, and peered into the sparkling eddies below, before I saw a trout rise gracefully and swallow an ash-colored midge which had floated down from the dam. In looking around me, I saw a cloud of drab ephemera, rather larger than musquitoes, swarming over the dry timber dam, and ever and anon, as one fell on the water, a trout rose very gracefully and swallowed it, turning quickly down, and causing a whirl made for its caudet train, which had so excited me when I first looked into the pool. With assiduity I commenced examining my flies in search of an ash midge. I soon found a pair, and, placing one on as my stretcher, the first cast I made with it fastened a three-pound trout, played and landed it. The next cast I fastened another, but so slightly that the hook parted from his mouth. Two or three more casts assured me that the aheal "smelt a rat," and as minks, muskrats and flies are their terror, I adjourned to another pool, and did not return to the dam until nearly night, when I took the conceit out of four more beauties; but, after playing the fifth nearly half an hour, he made a rush for the rapids, and went over the chute, carrying away my casting-line. Having captured five, and played two more treat trout day, I felt satisfied. I had for years contended that trout might be taken with artificial fly when in feeding humor, but I had never before found them so fastidious or discriminative. Since then, Mr. JAMES STEPHENS, of Hoboken, and myself, hired a trout-pond in Connecticut, and though I fished it three days, and Mr. STEPHENS three weeks, yet neither of us succeeded in capturing one with the fly. Neither would take a minnow, while they rose freely to angle and grub worms, cast without sinker, as a fly. On the last day of my visit to the pond I saw the trout rushing furiously after tadpoles; but the weather was not time to remain and lay that bait I probably lost a treat, for I have since heard that it is the favorite lure for trout in some parts of the State. Indeed, the fish culturists of France propagate frogs, that the trout may feed on tadpoles."

The most interesting and valuable part of Mr. SCOTT'S book is that devoted to the statistics of our commercial fisheries and the preparations for more fully developing the inland fisheries of our rivers. The commercial fisheries of America form a branch of industry of which very little is known, and whose extent and riches few suspect. Private rather than National and State enterprise has thus far engaged in this important work, and hence the fisheries have been gradually exhaustive, and little or no effort has been made to continue their productiveness. The protection and preservation of the river fisheries is what the New-England and Middle States are now attempting on a large scale, and Mr. SCOTT'S purpose in endeavoring to impress the importance and extent of these on the public mind, is to aid this enterprise. This part of his book ought to be carefully studied by every legislator in the country, National as well as State. Indeed, Mr. SCOTT justly considers that the enterprise is one which the National Government should foster, control and direct. "I humbly ask," says Mr. SCOTT, (page 263,) "Is it not the duty of Congress to authorize the Minister of the Interior to appoint a Commission for the improvement of the fisheries in the United States? Individual States cannot, unaided by the Federal Government, import either ova or young fishes of choice quality from abroad. Without the seal of a United States Commissioner, the Collectors of Revenue have no discretion but to destroy the importation by delay, exposure to heat or cold or to the air. Any authority given to the United States Consuls in the other hemisphere would prove ineffectual, for there are no Consuls near the great piscicultural establishment; and, in fact, since the fiasco of the Acclimatization Society in the presence of Mr. FRANCIS FRANCIS at Tinckenham, there is no establishment of fish culture left in Europe which supplies fecundated ova but the national one of Huningue, and by this one all applicants are served—by order of the French Government—free of expense. The liberality of France in bestowing ova and young fishes on all applicants did not prevent her from deriving the respectable revenue in 1862 from her fresh water fisheries of $4,000,000. In 1861 the Huningue establishment distributed about 9,000,000 ova, and in 1862, 12,000,000. One of the paramount duties of Government is to increase the stock of food fishes in the waters throughout the Union. Reports from the French Government have been forwarded to the President, and by him they have been laid before Congress, so that the subject will doubtless soon be acted on nationally." We wish we could agree with Mr. SCOTT in the last opinion as heartily as we do in the remainder. We fear that it will be a long time before the National legislators will be educated to understand the importance of the subject of our commercial fisheries.

Of course, as the fisheries of the country are wholly conducted by private enterprise, no full statement can be made of their extent. Mr. SCOTT has collected a large number of statistics, which indicate clearly the importance of the industry. As they are the only reliable tables which we remember to have ever seen on this industry, we group them below in a single table, which will be found to be of great interest to the commercial as well as sporting world:

TABLE OF AMERICAN FISHERIES (PARTIAL.)

Lake Superior, white fish, (catch of 1868)		$320,000
Sandusky, Ohio—
White fish	$450,000
Pike	180,000
Black bass	8,775
White bass	12,000

New-York, haddocks	15,000
Boston, haddocks	90,000
Portland, haddocks	27,000
Total		$51,248,825

It must be remembered that this is an imperfect statement—it represents really but a fraction of the great industry. The sale of oysters alone in only two markets of the country form one-half of this sum. The Chesapeake fisheries alone employ not less than 1,700 vessels and 7,000 men; the catch of herrings there often reaches 25,000,000 a year, besides 5,000,000 shad in the brief shad season, and not less than 8,000,000 bushels of oysters. The sardine fisheries of California bid fair to supersede those of the Mediterranean.

Mr. SCOTT does not fail to warmly recommend water-farming to the attention of all agriculturists, and agrees with the best authorities in saying that the water supply of every farm can be as profitably used as any other part of the possession. A full account of the best method of raising trout and salmon is given with cuts and diagrams and descriptions, which he who runs may read. This part of the book will well repay every farmer for its perusal. The amateur fish farmer will find no other architect or instructor necessary in the building of hatching boxes, ponds, races, &c., and in securing spawn, impregnating it, and growing the rich food in any desirable quantity.

BRIEF NOTICES.

—Biographical Sketches. By HARRIET MARTINEAU. (New-York: LEYPOLDT & HOLT.) The readers of our Sunday edition have already been made acquainted with the writer of this interesting and valuable work, by means of the extracts we have given from its pages from time to time; and we doubt not they will be glad to know that an American publishing house has now placed it within their reach in a very neat, convenient, and handsomely-printed volume of about 480 pages. These sketches were originally written for the columns of the London Daily News, the series having been commenced in 1862; and they are now presented in book form unaltered. For convenience of reference, they have been divided into six classes, namely, Literary, Scientific, Professional, Social, Politicians, Royal, and include the biographies of nearly fifty men and women whose names occupy eminent positions in literature, science, art, and politics. Miss MARTINEAU'S style is clear and easy, and often picturesque, and her judgments on men and events are usually sound and discriminating. The volume is of unusual interest and value, as well for the subjects as for the author's manner of treatment, and we doubt not it will find in this country the popularity it so well deserves.

—Realities of Irish Life. By W. STEUART TRENCH. (Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS.) We have already given an extended review of the English edition of this interesting volume, which now makes its appearance as an American reprint. We question whether a more interesting book on Irish wrongs and Irish crimes was ever given to the public. The stories, which have the great merit of being true, are retold with graphic force; and humor and pathos, tragedy and comedy, are mingled together in these pages with a skill that recalls some of the best efforts of DICKENS. The work is having a very large sale in England, and can hardly fail of equal popularity in this country.

—The True Christian Religion. By EMANUEL SWEDENBORG. Translated from the Latin by R. NORMAN FOSTER. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) In this series of essays or discourses the distinguished Theologian expounds his theory of true Christian philosophy. Without venturing upon any discussion of his views, which would occupy more room than could be afforded in the columns of a daily newspaper, we can only say that the translation is smooth and lucid, and is presented in a very attractive form. The work is published in two octavo volumes, and is printed in handsome type.

—The Villa on the Rhine. By BERTHOLD AUERBACH. Vol. I. (New-York: LEYPOLDT & HOLT.) The charm of AUERBACH'S novels lies in their perfect naturalness. They present no straining after effect, either in plot or style; none of that sensationalism which we find in English novels of the period. Tastes formed on Miss BRADDON'S stories will not relish his tranquil delineation of German life, nor appreciate his sympathy with little things; but those whose taste has not been thus perverted will take real enjoyment in his books. He is felicitous in narrative, in description and dialogue, and his stories progress with an easy and natural development that is very charming.

—The Curse of Gold. By Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS. (Philadelphia: T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS.) It is hardly necessary to criticise a new novel by Mrs. STEPHENS, as all her works, and their name is legion, have very nearly the same characteristics, varying chiefly in details of plot. She has many admirers, among readers who skim over novels for the sake of the story, and The Curse of Gold will doubtless find as many readers as any other of her publications.

—The Shakespeare Treasury. By CHARLES W. STEARNS, M. D. (New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SON.) The chief objection to works of this kind is that they discourage thorough study, and in this way do more harm than good, though convenient for occasional reference, and as an aid to faulty memories. But the best "Shakespeare Treasury" is a complete edition of the great dramatist's works. These ought to form a part of every college course, and no student's education should be considered finished who has not a thorough and intelligent knowledge of them. The book in question is neatly printed.

—Scenes in the Life of Harriet Tubman. By SARAH H. BRADFORD. (Auburn: W. G. MOSES.) This little volume records in a simple and attractive manner the story of a brave black woman, who during the war rendered efficient service to our soldiers in South Carolina. She is now in somewhat destitute circumstances, and this memoir has been prepared in the hope that its sale, the proceeds of which are to be entirely made over to her, (the expense of publishing being defrayed chiefly by citizens of Auburn,) might in some measure alleviate the pressure of her necessities.

—Kaidee, or the Hindoo Girl. We heartily commend to our readers a very interesting little volume with the foregoing title. It is from the pen of an accomplished missionary of the Woman's Union Missionary Society, Miss HARRIETTE G. BRITTAN, of the American Home, at Calcutta. All the incidents of this affecting little story are from life, woven by a gifted pen into an autobiography. This book should have a place in every Sabbath School library. It is right that our children should know what blessings Christianity has conferred upon our happy homes.

—Lost in Paris, and Other Tales. By EDWIN HODDER. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) Very good stories for youth, rather too English in tone, perhaps, but well-intentioned, and containing nothing really objectionable.

—The Rifle and the Hound in Ceylon. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER. With Illustrations. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) Like most sporting books, this is merely a record of a sportsman's ravages in a country where game abounds. There is apt to be much tameness in works of this sort, and this one is no exception to the rule.

FRUIT KILLED.—We learn from persons living in the country near the city that, with the exception of the apples, the fruit has been generously killed by the late "cold snap." We were shown a bough of cherry blossoms, however, picked some time in the past month, not one of which will believe, was injured. The wheat, also, we hear, has been very much injured by the cold weather of the last few days—but not so much, perhaps, as at first.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Pacific Railroad Litigation.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your leading article of April 15, on the Union Pacific Railroad litigation, reflects so severely, not only upon the administration of the law in this City, but upon the whole theory of equity jurisprudence, that I feel bound, as a member of the Bar, to meet some of your charges and to show that they are unjust.

A correspondent, attempting to reply to an editorial article of three columns, is at a great disadvantage. If he meets every charge, he must occupy at least six columns, and so doom his letter to the waste-basket. If he confines himself to the half column allowed him by usage, he must either leave the most of the editorial unanswered, or fail to answer thoroughly any part of it. I prefer to accept my half-column destiny, and to answer with some fullness only one or two of your complaints, without by any means admitting that the rest of your article is well founded.

In the first place, you charged that Judge BARNARD had tied up all the business of the Pacific Railroad until FISK's right to hold 20,000 shares was determined. This is wholly untrue, with this exception, that the Company was forbidden to hold an election until it was ascertained who had a right to vote. How small a part of the whole business of a corporation this is, no one needs to be told. But the propriety of this exception is one of the points which brevity compels me to leave undiscussed. The Company was not injured by this action to any appreciable extent.

The strong point of your article is in reference to the appointment of a receiver. This, you assert, is a monstrous remedy for the wrongs of a stockholder owning at most 20,000 shares. You say that all he could possibly claim would be that enough should be set aside to pay his personal claim.

In saying this, (pardon my bluntness,) you show that you do not appreciate the nature of the action, and are not familiar with the rules of law applicable to such actions. No stockholder is allowed to come into Court and say, "The directors of my company are stealing $5,000,000. My share of the loss is $10,000, and I want that amount set aside for my protection." On the contrary, he is not only at liberty to sue on behalf of all his associates, but is bound to do so, and cannot stand in Court a moment unless he claims justice in favor of every one interested in the fund, as well as for himself. Even if FISK own only six shares, his right and his duty to sue for the benefit of all are just as clear as though he owned nine-tenths of all the stock. This rule is no invention of Judge BARNARD. It is at least two hundred years old. It has been applied in every suit of this kind that is on record. It was the principle upon which Mr. BELMONT, who owned an infinitesimal proportion of Erie stock, brought the suit and obtained the receivership which you so loudly advocated last Fall. It is the principle upon which the holder of a minute fraction of the Cleveland and Pittsburg stock lately obtained a receivership over the whole road, without ever giving to the directors a chance to be heard, either before or afterward; a proceeding which again met your enthusiastic approval. Yet the readers of your paper might naturally infer that there never had been such an outrage committed in the history of the law, as the appointment of a receiver over a few books and bonds (leaving the bulk of the Company's property untouched) at the instance of a person who did not own a majority of the stock.

At the risk of incurring the reproach of pedantry, I refer, in proof of what I have said, to a few books. In Hichens vs. Congreve, (4 Russell, 562,) decided by Lord LYNDHURST in 1828, an action of much the same nature as that which you object to was brought by five stockholders out of some thousands. And Lord LYNDHURST, in reply to the very objection that you make, said: "To leave each shareholder to file a separate bill to redress his own wrong would in substance be a denial of justice." So in 1840, a Mr. PRESTON, owning only twenty shares in a company having many thousand shares, brought a suit almost exactly like that of Mr. FISK, and his suit was sustained before the Vice-Chancellor of England, (See Preston vs. Grand Dock Company, 11 Simons, 327.) In Bromley vs. Smith (1 Simons vs. Stuart, 8,) it was adjudged that a small minority of persons interested might maintain such an action though all the rest consented. In Evans vs. Coventry, (5 DeGex, M. and G. 911,) the Lord Justices of England appointed a receiver of the whole property of a large company, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, on the application of three or four creditors, whose aggregate claims did not amount to $500.

These are but a few of the precedents in a country where justice is administered with a purity which no man dares call in question. The precedents in this State are literally innumerable, and they have been created by Judges in whose integrity and learning you, as well as the whole community, have entire confidence.

I say, moreover, that Judge BARNARD could not have taken any other course without falling into utter contempt. The injunctions of the Court were flagrantly disobeyed. Twenty million dollars were removed from its jurisdiction, and all the rest of the Company's property was on its way to places where it might be safely divided among the Congressmen who arrangged in this monstrous scheme of fraud and robbery. A Judge who would refuse to assert the jurisdiction of his Court under such circumstances, would deserve impeachment. And if you can point out any method, materially different from that which was adopted, by which the property of the Company could have been kept in this State, and made subject to the decree of the Court, I should be glad to know of it.

In conclusion, allow me to say that no mode of attacking public corruption is so ill-advised as that of indiscriminate censure. What value can the Judges or will the public attach to the criticisms of a journal, even where they are just, if it attacks with equal severity proceedings which every lawyer knows to be perfectly well warranted by law, and perfectly legitimate in practice?

And, furthermore, in an age which cries out for the prompt execution of justice, and habitually denounces the law's delay, with what reason can the complaint be made, if, the moment such promptness is manifested, a still louder outcry is made against the swiftness and surenesss with which the mandates of the law are enforced?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A LAWYER.

Venality in the State Senate—Reply to a Mistaken Charge.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 20, 1869.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of the 17th inst., you classify Senators HUMPHREYS and VAN PETTEN as among the venal members of the Senate, and cite as an evidence of their venality the votes they have lately given.

I know, in this case, you do them both injustice, and I think you discourage any attempt on the part of our public representatives to be honest by thus mistaking the record.

I have no doubt that both the Senators I have named entertain a conviction that a railroad in Broadway is a necessity, and not having, by birth or education, imbibed that profound respect for Broadway, as Broadway, which is felt by many of the residents of New-York, they have voted to sanction the construction and operation of a railroad on that great thoroughfare.

But by so doing they are not necessarily to be charged with venality, nor would they be if all the history of legislation were published. In the Committee of the Whole, when the bill was under consideration, Mr. VAN PETTEN moved that the Company be required to carry passengers over any of their lines at a fare not exceeding five cents. This, by the way, is the true way of selling this great right or franchise. The Company should own it who will carry people for the lowest fare. When Mr. VAN PETTEN'S motion failed, he then sustained the motion made by Senator FOLGER to sell the franchise to the highest bidder. Does he appear in this to warrant your charge that he was corrupt, or acting from corrupt motives? On the other hand, was he not seeking to secure the greatest good to the greatest number?

Senator HUMPHREYS also sustained the motion to sell the franchise, and gave notice that when the bill came up for a third reading where he could call the yeas and nays, he should move to insert a clause requiring that money should be paid into the City Treasury for the grant.

That the bill has not already passed the Senate, is probably due almost entirely to the fixed purpose of these two Senators to engraft upon it a provision either to have cheap fare, or a bonus for the franchise.

ONE WHO KNOWS.

The First Moravian Church.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

An article appeared in the TIMES this morning on the "Opening of the First Moravian Church," corner Lexington-avenue and Thirtieth-street, stating "that this church was started about twenty years ago"—a very considerable error. The Moravian, or United Brethren's Church, was established in this City during the latter half of the eighteenth century, in Fair (now Fulton) street, opposite the North Dutch Church, and numbered among the earliest church erections here.

The first building contained a dwelling in front, and a chapel in the rear, approached by side aisles from the street. The Moravians were pioneer missionaries to this country, when it was mostly a wilderness, inhabited by Indians. At this time there was no proper place for the accommodation of the missionaries on their arrival here from Europe. To supply this want, the property was originally procured and occupied chiefly by them while passing to and fro. In time this grew into the nucleus of a congregation, which was established about the close of the last century. They worshipped on this spot for about fifty years, till the encroachments of business crowded them up town, along with so many other churches. They then located corner Houston and Mott streets. But, after tarrying there a few years, the neighborhood became so undesirable that they sold the property, consisting of a handsome church and parsonage. Owing to the great rise in the value of property in every place deemed suitable, and their means being limited, they were obliged to hold their services in public halls for the past three years, when, finally, they have procured the above-mentioned location, where may the congregation long rest and prosperity revisit them. It may be mentioned, in this connection, that the Moravians (so-called) are Episcopalians, claiming a descent, unbroken, from apostolic times. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Woman's Rights and Spiritualism in the South—New Opera House—The Negro Race—Bad Legislation—New Newspaper—New Books Soon to Appear.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Wednesday, April 14, 1869.

In my last I mentioned the fact that a colored woman had been heard in a speech before the Judiciary Committee of the South Carolina Legislature. The fact is significant of progress—is a representative as well as significant fact, in that it shows us that the old barriers of conservatism and precedent, nowhere ever stronger than in the Palmetto State, are sensibly yielding to the inevitable necessities of the new régime.

SPIRITUALISM.

Equally significant and equally representative with the woman's rights innovation is the delivery of the first lecture on Spiritualism ever listened to by a Columbia auditory, on last Sunday evening, the 11th. The lecturer—Mr. PERRY FULLER, of this place—advertised and delivered a lecture upon "Humanity's Final Triumph and Victory over Death," in which he announced himself as a believer in the harmonial or spiritual philosophy. His is the system of belief held by the Andrew-Jackson-Davis school of spiritualists. That which makes this lecture important is the fact that it is the entering wedge for a new law—is the proof that our public mind is becoming ready for those novel teachings and speculations which have always heretofore been sneered at as silly, shallow and corrupting, throughout the South, and most of all in this State. But here we have a citizen, not a prominent man, to be sure, but one who has resided in this community for thirty years, who boldly announces his belief in those things which the community have never otherwise known than as humbugs of the vilest class, announces his belief in spiritual intercourse through mediums, and broadly denies the inspiration—the plenary inspiration even—of the whole Scriptures, except in so far as all truth is inspired. This is a novelty that warns us to clearly recognize the fact that the new régime is now upon us.

AN OPERA HOUSE.

Among the more substantial and far more satisfactory indications of a new régime is the announcement that a portion of the burnt front on Main-street is to be built up in a fine opera house, containing an express office and some other offices. The plans are ready, the details fixed upon and the work is expected to commence in a few weeks. This plan comes from the Southern Express Company, which has adopted this method of furthering the interests of the place, in promoting their own, of course. It is also announced that the Company design a similar combined building in Augusta, Ga.; so that this opera house in Columbia appears to be one of several to be built, upon a new plan. What will come of it remains to be seen; but there is no doubt that, if this city is to be rebuilt and stocked with cotton factories—thus bringing a progressive population among us—the idea of th Express Company is an admirable one and will pay.

THE NEGRO RACE.

The total population of South Carolina is now, in round numbers, probably not far from 700,000; of which 400,000 are colored and 300,000 whites. In the course of time—somewhere within ten years, probably less—the majority must pass from the colored to the white race. Immigration will contribute toward this result. The improvidence of the negro and the universal disinclination now in the men to marry and take on themselves the trouble and worry of a family, diminish the increase of the race. But chief among the operating causes that are to numerically subordinate the colored to the white race, is the greater mortality among the negroes. This is demonstrable in several ways; but most unanswerably in the mortuary reports, wherever these are published. These reports in Charleston for the year 1868 exhibit the fact that out of a population of about 40,000 in the city—about half white and half black—there have died 1,900 persons; of these, 818 were colored, and 200 white. That is more than two negroes to one white died last year in Charleston. More exactly it is, one negro in every twenty-four dies annually; while in the same time only one in every fifty-one whites dies. This cause alone—leaving out the increase of the whites by immigration from the North and from Europe, and the failure to increase on the part of the negroes—this cause alone will result in an equality of the two races in twelve years. The vote of the State is about one in seven; that is, about 100,000 votes in all. Of these 60,000 are negroes and 40,000 whites—the majority of negroes being 20,000. The black race is crowding toward the coast, leaving the upper and middle country. This gives the mountain counties already a majority of votes; and this majority must increase on that side of the State. At the next elections, in 1872, it is very probable that the whites will have a majority in the State Senate, which consists of one from each county. The excessive maladministration of the present negro Legislature makes all well-disposed friends of good government hope that the power will soon pass from these ignorant creatures and tools of white aspirants, and be intrusted to better hands, whatever be the name or principles of the party that is to keep sway.

BAD LAWS.

Some of the specific charges of bad legislation consist in citing such acts as "An act to confirm and declare valid the recent election of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Charleston"—a singular law which has a history. There was a regular election of those officers, in which the negro faction was defeated. Senator CORBIN pushed through this act to remedy his failure at the ballot. But the officers elected refused to vacate. Writs both of quo warranto and mandamus were issued against them; but Judge CARPENTER (Republican) ruled out the former and decided against the latter. Meanwhile the really-elected officers held on. Then the case stands now. But Senator CORBIN has given notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court. Another objectionable measure is the "Joint resolution authorizing the Governor to employ an armed force for the preservation of peace"—a measure worthy of WENDELL PHILLIPS and his Draconian school—the execution of which might, and probably would, involve bloodshed and a deeper and deadlier hatred between the two races. The "armed force" means a force of negroes, and is so universally understood. Of a similar character is the "Joint resolution authorizing the Governor to purchase 2,000 stand of arms of the most approved pattern, with usual complement of ammunition." This also is minatory of the whites, and is in that spirit and result as bad as possible. Peace is not to be reached in this way. Another measure, involving heavy outlay, not yet necessary, and adopted apparently for the purpose of creating offices for their own number, is "An act to provide for the consolidation of the statute laws of the State of South Carolina." The negro from Michigan, named WHIPPER, who is Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and is, I believe, the author of the bill, was appointed upon this codifying committee, with a large annual salary, and apparently may continue at the work for ten years. The "Act to organize and govern the militia of the State" also has some highly partisan features. But all this family legislation is but a temporary evil, and will be removed when the negro domination passes away, which will be in a few years, doubtless.

NEW NEWSPAPER.

An announcement informs us that the Southern Guardian, a daily of several years ago, will be resumed in this city about the first of May. There is now but one daily—the Phœnix—published in this place. The Guardian expects to strike the spirit of the new régime.

LITERATURE IN COLUMBIA.

There are a number of books in press or ready for publication by citizens of Columbia. A series of School Readers is in issue, compiled by Prof. REYNOLDS, of the University of South Carolina. The publishers are DUFFIE & CHAPMAN, booksellers of the place. They announce also a series of School Histories of the several Southern States, of which that of South Carolina, by Mr. DAVIDSON, is nearly ready. Professor ALEXANDER, of the University, also has ready a History of Longstreet's Army Corps. It was announced a few days ago. Professor JOSEPH LECONTE has a text book in Chemistry announced by the University Publishing House of New-York. The same house announces as in press a Natural Philosophy, by Professor JOHN LECONTE. Dr. LA BORDE'S Physiology for Schools is expected during the present Summer. BOISE.

AFFAIRS IN GEORGIA.

The Adjournment of Congress—The Case of Georgia Postponed—Popular Feeling—Revival of Enterprise—Conservative and Radical Fend—Another "Unauthorized Draft"—Conflagration at Madison—Augusta Fire Department—Agricultural Tour, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Thursday, April 15, 1869.

Since the telegraph announced the adjournment of Congress without having taken any action "in the case of Georgia," every newspaper that has appeared—daily, semi-weekly and weekly—has at least once made the novel and consoling declaration that "we breathe freely." I have no doubt that there are several yet to come that will repeat it; and from the remarkable concurrence of sentiment on the subject, I think it may be accepted as an undoubted fact that we do breathe freely. Seriously, the fear of a total bouleversement of the State Government, and the creation of the thing which Mr. BULLOCK wanted, opp

Seizure of the Brig Mary Lowell—Explanations Demanded.

LONDON, Tuesday, April 20.

It is understood that the American Minister, in accordance with instructions from his Government, to-day made a formal demand on Lord CLARENDON for explanations in relation to the case of the American brig Mary Lowell, captured by a Spanish war-frigate, off one of the Bahama Islands while in charge of the British Revenue officials, with the seal of the Revenue Department on her hatches. This fact, taken in connection with the report of an increase of the American fleet in the waters of the West India Islands, creates a sensation in commercial circles, and is likely seriously to affect the Spanish loan now about to be put on the market.

In the House of Lords this morning the bill introduced by the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, regulating leases in Ireland, passed to a second reading.

The Encyclical Letter of the Pope Condemned.

MUNICH, Tuesday, April 20.

During a debate on the Educational Bill in the Bavarian Chambers to-day, the Prime Minister, Prince HOHENLOHE, made a remarkable speech. After protesting against the entrance of any party feeling whatever in the consideration of questions concerning the Church, he proceeded to stigmatize the Encyclical Letter of the Pope as contrary to the spirit of the age and as one of the causes of the differences which have arisen between the Church and the State.

The Spanish Budget Presented to the Cortes.

MADRID, Tuesday, April 20.

Señor FIGUEROLA, the Minister of Finance, presented the annual budget to the Constituent Cortes yesterday afternoon. He proposes to effect a reform in the system of prohibitory duties after a period of six years, by gradually reducing such duties. He recommends that the amount of the floating debt be fixed by law at 600,000,000 reals. The receipts of the Government for the current year are estimated at 2,000,000,000 reals. The Minister proposes that the salt and tobacco monopolies be abolished in 1870.

Duty on Brandies Exported to the United States.

PARIS, Tuesday, April 20.

In the Corps Legislatif yesterday, discussion arose concerning the duties on brandies exported to the United States. A reduction of the present rates of duty was suggested, and urged on the ground that such a change would be favorable alike to French commercial and American financial interests.

Release of Paraguayan Prisoners of War.

LISBON, Tuesday, April 20.

The regular mail steamship arrived from Rio Janeiro yesterday. The war news was not important. The Paraguayan prisoners of war released by the Allies at Angostura had rejoined President LOPEZ. The Paraguayans had made several very successful raids into the territory held by the Allies.

Success of the Rebels—They Besiege Trinidad—Arms from Nassau Landed for Them—Contradictory Reports.

HAVANA, Tuesday, April 20.

The Diario announces that the insurgents are closely besieging Trinidad, and have cut off all communication with the town on the land side. Troops have been dispatched from Cienfuegos to relieve Trinidad.

It is rumored that the steamer from Nassau has landed a large cargo of arms and ammunition for the rebels at Puerto Sama, on the northern coast, Eastern Department.

The same paper reports that one thousand insurgents were attacked and defeated by one hundred and fifty volunteers.

Reports continue to be received of the burning of plantations by the rebels. The Aballi estate, near Matanzas, is among those lately destroyed.

HAVANA, Tuesday, April 20—Evening.

Letters from Trinidad to merchants here repeat the report that 150 volunteers defeated a considerable body of insurgents near Trinidad. They state that the fight took place within half a league of the town, reduce the number of the insurgents to 800, and add that eight of the latter were killed. The latest news from Trinidad is to the effect that the rebels are evacuating the neighborhood.

A column of 2,600 Spanish troops has arrived at Nuevitas, and will march immediately to attack the rebels in the Puerto Principe region.

It is reported to-day that the insurgent chieftains, VILLANIEL, CASANOVA, and JUNCO, with 600 hundred armed followers, have voluntarily surrendered to the Spanish authorities.

A Commission has been appointed by the Captain-General to receive the proceeds of confiscated property, and have commenced to exercise their functions.

Attempted Revolution in Sinaloa—Great Yield in the Gold Diggings of Mazatlan.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, April 19.

Late Mazatlan advices represent that the insurgent leader, PALACIO, made a decided failure of his attempt to revolutionize the State of Sinaloa. After his escape from Mazatlan he proceeded immediately to Colima, and succeeded in reducing the garrison. Upon entering the place, and finding no money in the mint, he levied a contribution on the merchants of the city to raise $20,000, but succeeded in getting only $1,000. Not being able to sustain himself there he disappeared, and, it is believed, has gone to Tepic, relying on LOZADO for assistance.

Before PALACIO left Colima he proclaimed in favor of General PLACIDO VEGAS, as Governor of Sinaloa. The proclamation, however, created but little sympathy.

The City of Mazatlan has effected a loan of $20,000 for the purpose of building a hospital.

Everything was quiet in Lower California. LIZAR has been declared the Commandista of the military garrison. Two hundred members of the Legislative Assembly of Lower California have been suspended, but, altogether, the number of officers has been increased. The whole Administration has been changed.

The gold diggings recently discovered near Mazatlan had attracted crowds of persons. Considerable gold had been taken out, and one lump worth $1,000 was found.

The miners of San Antonio are doing well.

Kidnappers have appeared in Sinaloa, and the authorities have instituted strong measures against them.

STORMS AND FLOODS.

Terrific Wind and Hail Storms at the West—Buildings Blown Down and Several Persons Killed—Destructive Floods in Canada.

ST. LOUIS, Tuesday, April 20.

The damage by the hail-storm yesterday is variously estimated at $30,000 to $100,000; the latter is probably the most correct. The demolition of glass alone is quite fearful. No serious casualties are reported.

A Dubuque dispatch says a tornado passed over the upper portion of the city last evening, destroying a large amount of property, carrying away houses, taking off roofs, &c. A man named KRUBER was killed and a number of persons were injured. The Iowa Brewery and the Fifth Ward School-house were unroofed. It was the most destructive storm that has ever visited this section.

INDIANAPOLIS, Tuesday, April 20.

Last night a terrific hail-storm, accompanied by wind and lightning, passed over this city. The Indiana Central Railroad freight depot was blown down and a number of other buildings unroofed. A watchman of the Central depot, named ALLEN MCCUTCHAN, was killed and other employes seriously injured. Rev. DANIEL BALLOU, a Universalist minister, who was passing at the time of the accident and took refuge in the depot, was seriously if not fatally injured. All the telegraph lines in the city were prostrated, but have been repaired and communication is resumed.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, April 20.

The late heavy rains washed away the embankment on the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, between Springfield and Decatur. The mail train running West, this morning, was thrown down the embankment. No information has been received as to whether any one was hurt.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Tuesday, April 20.

The storm last night did great damage to the houses, fences, forests, &c., south and southeast of this city. Roofs of houses were taken off, walls blown down, and fences and trees prostrated. The storm extended as far as Chattanooga.

CONCORD, N. H., Tuesday, April 20.

The streams in northern New-Hampshire are very high. The upper dam on the Masconia River at Lebanon Centre was carried away. The loss is estimated at $2,000. Other damage was also done in that vicinity.

At Hartland, Vt., on the Vermont Central Railroad last night, a culvert was washed away, and soon after an express train ran into the opening. MONTREAL, Monday, April 19.

The ice has moved out of the Chateauguay River and Lake St. Louis. The St. Lawrence River rose from thirty feet on Saturday to forty-two feet to-day. The lower part of Griffintown is flooded, and much distress is anticipated. Notwithstanding the ice in the river remained unmoved, the water decreased considerably until noon to-day, when it again commenced rising, causing apprehensions of a worse flood. The ice has broken up in Lake St. Peter, and will hasten the dislodgement here. Griffintown lies under two or three feet of water. This city has appointed a committee to attend any distress that may arise through the flood. There is still considerable floating ice in the river.

The Fires in the Nevada Gold Mines Extinguished—Alaska Traders in Trouble.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, April 19.

The Crown Point and Kentuck shafts have been opened, and there are no indications of fire. The water has risen nearly up to the 500-feet level, and it will take several days, pumping to overcome it. The explorations so far denote that the actual damage to the mines has been very slight.

The ship Cusrowitch, belonging to the American-Russian Commercial Company, has arrived from Sitka, having been sent back to this port in charge of a revenue officer, with a cargo of salt which she took hence. As a number of vessels cleared for Alaska with assorted cargoes, intending to trade with the Indians and trappers, much anxiety is felt by the owners as to how they will fare in case they fall into the Collector's hands and become subject to his arbitrary rulings.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Tuesday, April 20.

The proposed change of the officials of the Branch Mint in this city creates an indignation in the business community. Nearly all the principal bankers and business men have united in telegraphing to Washington protesting against any removal of the present efficient officers. The change proposed involves a suspension of the mint operations for several weeks, and will have a damaging effect on financial transactions generally.

The nomination of D. W. CHEESMAN as Sub-Treasurer is regarded unfavorably, and a long protest has been telegraphed to Washington urging his rejection by the Senate.

The case of the ship Cusrowitch, seized by the Collector of Sitka, has been dismissed by the District Court, and the vessel is allowed to proceed to her destination again.

The Burton-Kimberly Case in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Tuesday, April 20.

In the United States Circuit Court to-day, Chief-Justice CHASE sitting with Judge GILES, the case of Kimberly against Butler came up. The counsel for the plaintiff are WM. MEADE ADDISON and Hon. R. J. BRENT, and, for the defendant, Hon. CALEB CUSHING and WM. SCHLEY. Argument was had on the construction of the word "arrest" in the Constitution, and the privilege of a member of Congress from arrest. Mr. ADDISON opened the argument and was followed by Mr. CUSHING. Mr. SCHLEY, in consequence of illness, did not argue the case. Mr. BRENT followed Mr. CUSHING. The point this morning was argued on demurrer to the plea in abatement. At the conclusion of the argument, the Court reserved its decision until to-morrow morning, but intimated that the case could go on. A plea of limitation under the act of Congress of 1866, that the cause of action had not accrued within two years before the suit was brought, was next demurred to by the plaintiff, and, after argument, the demurrer was overruled. The plaintiff then filed a special replication that the cause of action was not within the description of cases mentioned in the act of Congress. Defendants demurred to this replication. General BUTLER opened the argument on demurrer, and was replied to by Mr. ADDISON. The Court adjourned until to-morrow morning.

A FRAUD FRUSTRATED.

Attempt to Defraud Insurance Companies—A Vessel Cleared from New-Orleans with False Papers.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, April 16.

The Collector of the port, Col. CASEY, acting upon information received from his officers yesterday morning, directed Special Deputy Surveyor CHAS. B. KEITH to seize the American brig C. C. Colson, Capt. PRATT, lying at Post No. 16, foot of St. Joseph-street, for attempted violation of the revenue laws, and because it was reported she had on board arms for the revolutionists in Cuba. The seizure was made about 11 o'clock. The brig, a vessel of 300 29-100 tons, arrived here in February last from Messaina, and was in March purchased by FRANCIS H. PAGE, a citizen of New-Orleans, for the sum of $14,000, Mr. WADDY THOMSON holding a mortgage upon her for the sum of $15,000. The brig was then advertised for Liverpool, and she was apparently loading with ordinary freight—cotton, staves, moss, cotton seed, &c. All things worked along very smoothly until a President of one of our insurance companies was called upon by Captain GEO. BAKER, who informed him that he had been approached by parties interested in the brig, with the proposition to take command of her and to destroy her at sea, for which service they proposed to give him $6,000. He was astounded by so outrageous a proposition, but, determining upon the course he should pursue, said he would consider the matter. The President, after consulting with numerous insurance friends, advised the Captain to lead the parties on, and without absolutely committing himself, to induce them to believe that he would take command of the vessel. This he did, and it was not long before he was approached by the same parties with the request that he would sign bills of lading for 250 bales of cotton, which had not been placed on the brig. This he declined to do, and they were compelled to procure another man, Captain JULIUS A. PRATT, who was placed temporarily in charge, and who signed the bills of lading, upon which money was realized by purchasing exchange. Things were now brought very rapidly to a crisis; the detectives of the insurance companies reported that but few bales of cotton had gone on board, and these were mostly rubbish, or what is technically termed "moats."

Wednesday the ship was regularly cleared by Captain PRATT, and the following freight appeared upon her manifest: 1,000 barrels rosin, by C. FAERY; 46 bales of cotton, by JAMES HAYMOUR, and 600 bales cotton, 250 bags cotton seed and 26 bales of moss, by J. C. FORBES. The staves shipped by Mr. FAERY were, it is asserted, the only bona fide shipment, and all the crew of the cargo, which actually consists of some eighty bales of moss and two or three hundred bales of rubbish, was made up for the express purpose of defrauding the insurance offices and banks, for it is believed that exchange for the full amount of the supposed value of the cargo, some $115,000, has been already negotiated. Mr. PURDEY, who appears prominently in the matter, is the same party who was arrested some time since for an alleged whiskey fraud. He is the largest shipper, and suspicion falls upon him as one of a number who have been plotting to defraud together for the purpose of carrying just such nice little jobs through.

The papers being obtained they were handed over to Captain GEORGE BAKER, who, it was understood, was to take command of the brig Wednesday night, just previous to her departure. Everything was in readiness that night, and the arrival of the Captain with the vessel's papers was all that was waited for. A steamer was sent to back down near the brig, but none left her, and as Captain BAKER did not appear, she was unavoidably detained and finally seized, as stated above.

Thus matters stand at present, and as the District-Attorney has been notified of the seizure, he will, of course, take the proper steps in the matter. If a search of the cargo substantiates the charges made by Captain BAKER and the detectives, criminal proceedings will, of course, be instituted against the guilty parties.

The Colson's cargo, we learn, was insured in New-York and Philadelphia offices. One company in New-York had a full line of about $60,000. We have as yet been unable to ascertain in what institutions the exchange was negotiated.

WASHINGTON.

Attack of Senator Ross, of Kansas, on the New Administration.

The Senate Resolved to Adjourn on Thursday.

Another List of Nominations and Confirmations to Office.

No More Nominations to be Made Before the Adjournment.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, April 20.

In the open session of the Senate this morning, which lasted one hour, there were personal explanations and a spicy speech from Senator ROSS, of Kansas, and a discussion and a settlement of the final adjournment of this special Executive Session.

SENATOR ROSS' EXPLANATION.

Mr. ROSS caused to be read the Washington dispatch to one of your City contemporaries, which purported to give an account of an interview between the Kansas Senator and President GRANT, in which language neither classic nor elegant, was put into the mouths of both gentlemen. All this Mr. ROSS denied to be true. Mr. ROSS might have stopped here, but he did not. He made a severe attack on the Administration, in the interest of some of his constituents who have been removed on the sole ground, as he alleged, of personal friendship toward himself. He also quoted the President as saying that the holding of an office by any man for the last year and half was presumptive evidence that he was a Johnson man, from which Mr. ROSS drew the inference that this would be sufficient to justify a removal. Mr. POMEROY considerably weakened Mr. ROSS' attack by stating, when the latter had taken his seat, that one or two of the men who had been put out were candidates on the Democratic ticket last Fall.

ADJOURNMENT.

After some discussion the day of adjournment was fixed for Thursday next, which probably means Friday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate spent four hours in Executive Session to-day and confirmed about sixty nominations, and discussed the San Juan Treaty. Mr. GARRETT DAVIS made the principal, and as may be naturally expected, the longest speech on the treaty, which had the effect of postponing action on it to-day. The indications to-night are that the treaty will be either rejected or postponed until next session, the probabilities being on the former side. This and the one with the Sandwich Islands are the two treaties to which Mr. SUMNER referred to-day when the subject of adjournment was under discussion.

NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED.

Colonel SCHINNER, in whose case there was a warm contest, was confirmed Secretary of Montana Territory, and H. D. BARNAN was also confirmed Fifth Auditor of the Treasury.

NOMINATIONS.

The last list of nominations that will go to the Senate during the present session, was sent in to-day. It comprised some sixty names, of whom more than two-thirds were Postmasters and revenue officers. The most important names in the list were DAVID A. NUNN, Ex-member of Congress from Tennessee, as Minister to Ecuador, and Dr. HIOLTE, heretofore nominated minister to Costa Rica, is now transferred to Nicaragua. JAMES L. FOLEY, of Kentucky, was nominated Secretary of Legation at Madrid, and JAS. ST. CLAIR BOOL, of Illinois, Secretary of Legation to Mexico. The only important Postmasters were JAMES KELLY, reappointed at New-York, and MORGAN L. FRANKLIN for Albany.

THE INDIAN SERVICE.

The list of appointments for the Indian service has not yet been determined on to a sufficient extent to permit the names to be sent to the Senate prior to the adjournment. The appointments will therefore be made hereafter under mature and deliberate consideration.

KLEPTOMANIA.

The curious case of kleptomania, or petty thieving, which has just been detected in a member of the Union League Club of Philadelphia, who had been nominated and confirmed as Consul to Leghorn, has received prompt attention here. The President to-day removed the new appointee, and nominated another man.

NOMINATIONS DISAPPROVED.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, at its meeting this morning, had an extended discussion on some of the diplomatic appointments. Finally it was resolved to report against the confirmation of Mr. PIKE as Minister to Brazil, and of Mr. CARLISLE as Minister to Sweden. The unfavorable report of the Committee will, in all probability, be sufficient to secure their rejection. Mr. J. A. JONES, who has been nominated for the Belgian Mission, will be reported on favorably to-morrow.

ADMIRAL PORTER.

It is reported to-night that Admiral PORTER wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Navy to-day asking to be relieved from duty at the Navy Department, to which request Secretary BORIE declined to accede. Admiral PORTER is said to have been influenced in this action by the desire to save Mr. BORIE from any share in unpopularity which attaches to some of the measures which the Admiral deems it necessary to carry out in order to promote the greater efficiency of the Department.

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

The total receipts of internal revenue from July 1, 1868, to the 18th inst., were $112,000,000. The ordinary receipts for the next seventy days, the remainder of the fiscal year, will probably average $12,000,000 per month, or a total of $98,000,000. To be added to this are the receipts from special taxes, which fall due May 1. Also the income tax, a large portion of which will be collected during the present fiscal year. This will cause the receipts from internal revenue to approximate $160,000,000 to $170,000,000 for the present fiscal year; even more than verifying the estimates of Commissioner WELLS. The receipts from distilled spirits for the first six months of the present fiscal year were about $60,000,000, against $9,000,000 for the corresponding period of last year. The receipts from this source for the past three months are considerably in excess of the receipts for the first three months of the first half of the present fiscal year; so that there is little doubt that the receipts from this source for the year will reach $40,000,000, against $18,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1868.

GENERAL BURBRIDGE.

General BURBRIDGE has not yet escaped from his difficulties. To-day he had a hearing before Judge WYLIE, at 300 P. M., Messrs. WALTER D. DAVIDGE and Judge PENNIPACKER, of Kentucky, appearing as his counsel. In answer to a question from Judge WYLIE, General BURBRIDGE stated that he was a native of Kentucky; had not been in Missouri for a year, and then only remained eight days. Judge WYLIE said he did not know what else he could do in the premises other than to remit the prisoner to the custody of the officer, to be taken to Missouri. Mr. DAVIDGE stated to the Court that he desired time to look into the matter. He had only just been retained in the case, and was not informed in regard to it. Judge WYLIE said in view of these facts he would continue the case until 3 o'clock to-morrow, taking General BURBRIDGE's own recognizance in the sum of $500 for his appearance at that time.

BROKERS' TAX CASE.

The Wall-street brokers' tax case was argued to-day before Commissioner DELANO and Solicitor SNIVEY, of the Revenue Department. A deputation of the Stock Exchange appeared, accompanied by counsel, and stated their case forcibly and at length. Ex-Assessor WEBSTER appeared for the Government, and acted materially in putting the case in a plain light before the officers who are to make the decision. No decision will be made for some time, but the preponderance of opinion seems to be that the brokers will have to pay until the Courts decide otherwise.

RECEPTIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Now that the pressure of office-seekers at the White House has almost ceased, the President will hereafter admit the public to interviews at any hour between 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 P. M., except upon Cabinet days, Tuesdays and Fridays, when the doors will be closed at noon.

MRS. GRANT'S RECEPTION.

Mrs. GRANT'S reception this afternoon was largely attended despite the unfavorable weather. She was assisted by Mrs. Senator COLE and Mrs. Senator WILSON. Several prominent army and navy officers escorted ladies to the reception.

VIRGINIAN DELEGATION.

The President will give an audience to a number of Virginians, headed by Governor WELLS, on Friday next, when it is supposed some suggestion will be made as to the time of holding an election.

No States are designated in the original messages transmitting the following nominations: E. C. Ransdell, Solicitor of the Treasury; H. D. Norton, Wisconsin, Fifth Auditor; A. H. Marshall, Third Assistant Postmaster-General; Adam Badeau, Assistant Secretary of Legation at London; Talmadge C. Jutting, Consul at Maracaibo; Clifton J. True, Consul at St. Thomas; Wm. A. Richardson, Massachusetts, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Rossiter W. Clark, of Ohio, Third Auditor; George Harris, Maryland, First Assistant Postmaster-General; John W. Douglass, Pennsylvania, Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue; John Allison, Pennsylvania, Registrar of Treasury; O. M. Long, Consul at Panama.

A careful examination of the original messages shows that in making nominations the Attorney-General usually omits the name of the State in which the person nominated resides; and that in making nominations for positions in the Territories the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Interior also frequently omitted the name of the State. The compiler, therefore, says the list submitted to the Senate is very incomplete so far as Territorial appointments are concerned. In the nominations of foreign positions the names of those withdrawn have been omitted.

INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU.

The new organization of the Internal Revenue Bureau, which has been under consideration by the Commissioner and his assistants, went into effect to-day. The various branches of the office are divided into three prominent divisions. The first division, under the direction of Solicitor SMITH, will be known as the LAW DIVISION, and will have charge of reports, records and dockets of suits and proceedings in internal revenue cases; the examination of alleged frauds and infractions of laws, and the reports of Supervisors and Detectives; also all questions relating to legacies, succession incomes, salary, dividends and special taxes, and the stamping of deeds and other instruments of writing, and in general, of all legal questions arising out of the administration of the Bureau, not especially assigned by law to other officers. This division is subdivided into three sections, embracing in detail what is given in the above general statement. In it is also included the charge of tobacco not in bond.

The second division relates to books and accounts of the office, and is under the charge of Second Deputy GEORGE PARNELL, assisted by CHARLES A. PELL. The duties are the administrative examination of all money accounts of Assessors, Assistant Assessors, Collectors, Supervisors, Surveyors of Distilleries, and miscellaneous accounts arising under the general and special appropriations for this branch of the service; the examination and action upon estimates of funds required by disbursing agents; the general book-keeping of the office, and the issue of the various kinds of stamps for payment of taxes, with the preparation of statistics. This division is subdivided into four sections.

The Third Division will be under the charge of the Third Deputy, who has not yet been appointed, assisted by S. M. WILCOX, and has charge of all matters relative to the tax on distilled spirits and tobacco in bond, together with the care of the general files of the office. This division is subdivided into three sections.

Deputy Commissioner DOUGLASS, under the new organization, is charged with all records concerning appointments, the office mails, and is general executive officer under the immediate direction of the Commissioner

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Great Grain Robbery—Special Committee Examining the Books of the Firm.

Nothing has transpired tending to indicate the whereabouts of Mr. WM. M. PAINE, the defaulting warehouseman. The opinion now very generally prevails, however, that he has not gone to Europe, as was at first supposed, but that he is stopping with some of his relatives or friends, either in this City or in New-Jersey, in which State he resided, awaiting the time when a compromise of the questions involved will enable him to make his appearance with safety. On Monday evening the gentlemen interested in the stock of grain now stored in the large warehouse at the foot of Degraw-street, Brooklyn, held a meeting for the purpose of adopting some plan by which they might be enabled to remove their property, all of which is now in the possession of Sheriff CAMPBELL, in accordance with the injunction order issued by Judge GILBERT, restraining the transfer thereof until a judicial decision had been obtained concerning the matters at issue. One of the conferees was the appointment of a committee to examine the books of the warehousing firm, and to determine how much grain there now is in store, and to what parties it belongs. The gentlemen so appointed are JOHN A. MOTT, President of the United States Warehouse Co.; J. P. WALLACE, President of the New-York Guarantee and Indemnity Co.; D. T. ALLERTON, of the firm of DARLING, ALLERTON & ROGERS; GEORGE WADE, of the firm of WADE & Ferry; A. E. OAR, of the firm of DAVID DOWS & Co., and F. H. ANBOTT, of the firm of F. H. ANBOTT & Co. When these gentlemen shall have ascertained what amounts of grain are stowed in the warehouse, and who are the respective owners of the same, application will be made to permit the removal of such quantities as are not subject to the order of the United States Warehouse Company, in whose behalf the injunction was issued. Sheriff CAMPBELL took possession of the books of the firm at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and transferred them to his office, in the Brooklyn Court-house, whither the gentlemen of the Committee proceeded, and began their investigation. It is anticipated that the owners of the grain in store will be allowed to remove their property as soon as this Committee shall have reported to Judge GILBERT the result of their examination, which will probably be to-morrow. In order to facilitate the investigation, persons holding receipts for grain stored by PARKER & PECK are requested to send the same to Mr. JOHN W. MOTT, No. 7 State-street, Chairman of the Committee.

Alleged Fraudulent Practices—Adroit Operations in Sewing-Machines.

DERLISSA HUNTER, of No. 19 East Twenty-seventh-street, made an affidavit yesterday before Justice MANSFIELD, at the Essex Market Police Court, whereby it appears that she was in the habit of trading with one GEORGE W. BROWN for sewing-machine needles and other articles, and that thereby a business intimacy had been established between them. Finally BROWN persuaded her that her Wheeler & Wilson machine was inferior to the Howe, of which he claimed to be the agent, and induced her to trade with him for one of the latter, the bargain being that she was to give him the old machine and $35. The transaction was consummated on this basis, but very shortly after BROWN had disappeared with her machine and money, one Mr. FULLER, of No. 2 Sixth-avenue, appeared as a claimant for the Howe machine which BROWN had left her. The explanation of FULLER was that BROWN had obtained the machine from him by pretence that Mrs. HUNTER was a cash customer for it at $65, and BROWN not having made any return of the matter FULLER had gone to him for the money or the machine. Mrs. Hunter could not pay for it, and consequently was obliged to surrender it, and by the adroit wickedness of BROWN was swindled out of $35 and a machine in good order.

The second achievement of BROWN was of a bolder order, and is fully set forth in the complaint of SARAH MOORHEAD, of No. 543 Eighth-avenue. She states that he called on her, saying that he was Mr. FULLER, doing business at No. 697 Sixth-avenue, as agent for the Howe sewing-machine, and that he earnestly desired her to take a Wilson for the use of his wife, and as the firm would not sell him one in consequence of his agency for the rival house, he desired Mrs. MOORHEAD to accommodate him by making the purchase, for which, of course, he would furnish the money. She finally consented, and he visited the warerooms at No. 625 Broadway, where a machine valued at $75 was selected, and was ordered to be sent to the residence of BROWN, not FULLER, No. 191 Seventh-street. At the time of the purchase BROWN made the discovery that he had left his pocket-book at his store, and Mrs. MOORHEAD, accommodating to the last, paid $55 and the machine was delivered. BROWN was profuse in his thanks, and declared he would immediately call and repay her. It is alleged that he paid the money to the firm to which he owed the machine, but the agency of Mrs. MOORHEAD in the transaction and the money she had paid slipped from his memory, and she soon discovered that she had been duped.

BROWN denied his guilt, and as is usual in cases of this character, he was committed for examination on both charges.

Suicide by a Druggist in Consequence of Intemperance.

The suicidal mania is still rampant in this City, another instance of self-destruction having occurred yesterday, the run bottle in this instance having led a human being to an untimely death through temporary insanity and continued wretchedness. It appears that an Englishman named JAMES WALKER, about 60 years of age, opened a drug store in Brooklyn some three or four years ago, and was in the way of doing a prosperous business, when his appetite for strong drink overcame his better judgment, so that like many a drunkard before him, WALKER neglected his store, and his customers, losing all faith in him, left him, and sought their drugs where a cool head and steady hand could be found. His business prospects becoming clouded, WALKER proceeded still lower on the stage of dissipation, and became so prostrated by the evil effects of liquor that he was sent to the Inebriate Asylum in Brooklyn, where he remained some time, and was finally discharged in apparent good health and the possession of all his faculties.

During the past few weeks WALKER had frequently dropped into the drug store of Dr. R. R. WILSON, at the corner of James New Chambers streets, and was occasionally left in charge by the proprietor while absent on business. On Monday night WALKER called on Dr. WILSON, and remarking that he had been drinking too much gin, asked leave to remain in the store all night. The request was granted, and WALKER stretched himself upon a sofa in the office, and was left in charge, WALKER promising to open the store in the morning and wait for the doctor.

At 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning Dr. WILSON came down town, and was surprised to find the store still closed and secured. He immediately effected an entrance, and discovered WALKER lying on the sofa, quite dead. The Police notified Coroner SCHUMMER, who despatched his deputy, Dr. CUSHMAN, to the scene, when the remains were removed to the Morgue for post-mortem examination. On searching the clothing of the deceased Dr. CUSHMAN found a number of letters of recommendation, some private papers, cards and a small amount of money. As the deceased had been in the habit of taking morphine, it is supposed that, disgusted with the life he was leading, he had increased the usual dose of the narcotic drug, and so drifted away on the waves of eternity. The relatives of WALKER are all in England. The inquest will be held to-day.

The Colored University near Xenia, Ohio.

Wilberforce University, the only collegiate institution in the United States which has been founded, and which is exclusively owned by colored people, is appealing to the charitable of this City for aid. The University, which is situated in Green County, Ohio, a few miles from Xenia, was, until the year 1865, in a flourishing condition, having prepared 127 young men and women for teachers, most of whom have engaged in their vocation in the Southern States. On the 14th of April of the year mentioned the buildings of the college were totally destroyed by an incendiary fire. Active measures were at once instituted for the purpose of rebuilding the college, and it came in a prompt and liberal response to the appeal for assistance the good work will be found. JOHN COUNSE, Esq., the President of the Board of Trustees, is now temporarily at No. 523 Broome-street, and is authorized to receive subscriptions in aid of the enterprise. Mr. COUNSE is endorsed by Chief Justice CHASE, Governor HAYES, General O. O. HOWARD, and a number of other gentlemen, who are equally well known; and the Cincinnati newspapers generally have also earnestly supported the efforts which are in progress to reinstate the College. Among the contributions already made are one from Chief Justice CHASE of $100, and two of $500 each from Hon. GERRIT SMITH, of New-York, and JOHN L. PEET, Esq., of Cincinnati.

Military.

The annual meeting of the Old Guard will be held at the ASTOR House on Thursday evening, April 22, when their first anniversary will be celebrated in a suitable manner. This organization was chartered at the session of our Legislature held in 1868, and is composed of the veteran members of those famous old Tank companies, the Light Guard and City Guard. The Old Guard is now very strong, and number on their roll many of the best men who have ever served with the First Division New-York State militia. The corps is commanded by Major GEORGE W. MCLEAN, who performed an important part in the institution of this company.

Serious Charge Against a Police Officer.

Yesterday morning Mrs. ELIZA R. ROBBOCK, of No. 49 Monroe-street, appeared in Inspector DILKS' office and made complaint against Patrolman JOHN GARNON, of the First Ward. It appears that the Complainant has recently had occasion to call upon her neighbors in the ninth tenement in Mt. Pleasant-place, when her husband, being a member of the Metropolitan Fire Department, BOACH, by reason of his duties as a fireman, is resident at house, and the frequent visits of GARNON to the wife has caused considerable scandal in the house. Mrs. ROBBOCK states that last night a quarrel over the matter a few days ago, and, on Monday her apartments were invaded by GARNON, Mrs. ROACH and another woman, when the Chief Injured in a needy dispute, GARNON so longer proceeding to extremities by knocking Mrs. ROBBOCK down, and held her while the two women beat her unmercifully and damaged her hair. Considerable furniture was also smashed in the struggle. The Board of Police Commissioners intend making an investigation in the case on Friday.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

THE INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS—FEDERAL TAXATION OF NON-RESIDENT ALIENS—THE RIGHT TO TAX INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS BY THE STATES THROUGH WHOM THEY PASS.

The Northern Central Railway Company vs. John G. Jackson. In error to the Circuit Court for the District of Maryland.—Mr. Justice NELSON delivered the opinion of the Court: This is a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland. The suit was brought by Jackson, a non-resident alien, against the Northern Central Railroad Company, incorporated by the State of Maryland, to recover $2,500, coupons attached to bonds issued by the Company. A copy of one is as follows: "The Northern Central Railroad Company will pay to the bearer, Jan. 1, 1868, $50, being half a year's interest on bond No. 1,837 for $1,000. J. S. Lach, Treasurer." The signature of the Treasurer was admitted. The plaintiff then proved a demand of payment at which time and place the Company offered to pay the amount, deducting a tax of three mills per dollar of the principal of said bond, claimed to be due to the State of Maryland, under an act of Congress, and a further tax of three mills per dollar of the principal of said bond, claimed to be due to the State of Pennsylvania, which sums they gave in evidence were retained by the Northern Central Railroad Company by the authority of the laws of said States of Pennsylvania, and rested. The demand then gave in evidence, on the articles of association of said railroad company, one of which had been incorporated by the State of Maryland, and the other by the State of Pennsylvania, and then gave a tax of twenty cents from Baltimore to Baltimore. The counsel for the plaintiff was entered into by the respective companies in pursuance of acts of the Legislature of the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania, which the two companies were bound to use, called the Northern Central Railroad Company, and was incorporated by the said name by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and by the same name by the Legislature of Maryland, and that the two companies received from the new road the number of shares held by them in the old, and upon the receipt of which the new road proceeded and the directors named in the act took possession of the road, and the first meeting of the stockholders of the new road, at which time the stockholders of the old companies were merged in the new, and the directors named in the act of Assembly, 1854, it operated as a transfer of the property of the old companies to the new road, and the property thereon, which mortgaged was alleged to secure the payment of the bonds held by people to be based in unknown Canada, and the Pennsylvania road by the Legislature of Pennsylvania. A portion of them is in the hands of the plaintiff, the coupons attached to which are the subjects of this suit. Upon this state of the case it is insisted, on the part of the defendants, that the Northern Central Railroad Company is entitled to have a deduction from the coupons of three mills per dollar of the principal of each bond, as a tax, paid on the same to the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania. This is denied by the plaintiff. It has been argued for the plaintiff, that the acts of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, which propose to tax the income of the bonds in question, are contrary to law, and that the State of Pennsylvania, in the exercise of its sovereignty, do not consider it important to exercise such a power, for it is not to be denied, as the Courts of the State have expounded these laws, they authorize the taxes in question, and, if so, other questions arised against the tax the defendants would call. It is not in open question we should have concurred with the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the opinion they have given the views of the plaintiff's counsel. There acts, as expounded, tax "money owing by insolvent debtors, or secured by promissory note, penal or single bill, bond or judgment, and twenty cents on every dollar collected of the principal, payable out of the interest, and it is made the duty of the President or other officer of the Company to pay the tax to the collector or Internal Revenue Collector to retain the amount of the tax. Nor shall we inquire into the construction of the Legislature of Maryland, attempting to impose this tax upon the principal, as we think it plain that it is objectionable upon other grounds. We think it will be conceded by all that the tax upon the promissory note or bond, given by the resident debtor, and the withholding of the amount from the creditor, is a tax upon the creditor, which, if collected, is to be a tax upon the non-resident creditor. It is not a tax of the money paid, because that belongs to the resident debtor, for which he is taxable; it is a tax on the consideration of the bond, which is in the hands of the non-resident holder.

The ground upon which we place the objection to this case is the fact is, in brief, that the bonds in question were issued by a corporation created by the State of Maryland, by the act of consolidation, transferred it with its franchises and other interests, connected therewith, including their stock to the new organization which have issued these bonds. The security, therefore, pledged and bound for the payment of them and of the interest, consisted in the franchises of the road, and, in case of a failure to pay the principal or interest, this portion, with its franchises and fixtures, would be liable to sale in satisfaction of bonds and interest. Now, it is apparent, if the State of Pennsylvania is at liberty to tax these bonds, that, to the extent of this Maryland portion of the road, she is taxing property and interests which are not within her jurisdiction. They are wholly tax-free as effectually as if it were situate within her own limits. The Maryland portion is not liable for the payment of any portion of the bonds, and, therefore, none can be made, in the taxation, with reference to the line within the respective jurisdictions of the States. If the tax is permitted as it respects one bond, it must be as it respects all. Again, if Pennsylvania can tax these bonds upon the same principle Maryland can tax them. This is too apparent to require argument. The only difference in the two cases is that the line of the road is longer within the limits of the former than within the latter. Her tax would be a more marked one beyond the jurisdiction of the State, as the property and interests outside of its limits would be larger. The consequence of this tax of three mills on the dollar would be double taxation of the bondholder. Each State could tax the entire issue of bonds, amounting, as we have seen, to $2,500,000. The effect of taxation upon the bondholder is readily seen. A tax of three mills per dollar of the principal, at an interest of six per centum, payable semi-annually, is less in amount than a tax of twenty per centum; and, therefore, if this consolidation of the line of road had been made into New-York, instead of Pennsylvania, the deduction would have been thirty or forty. If Pennsylvania must tax bonds of this description, she must confine it to bonds issued exclusively to her own incorporations. Our conclusion on this branch of the case is, that to permit the deduction of the tax from the coupons in question would be giving effect to the acts of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, upon property and interests lying beyond her jurisdiction. The next question is whether or not the coupons were subject to a tax of five per centum per annum to the United States on the 1st of July, 1866, when they became due? The first income tax was imposed by the act of Congress passed Aug. 5, 1861, (12 U. S. Stat. p. 309.) The forty-ninth section of that act directed to be levied and collected upon the annual income of every person residing in the United States, from whatever source derived, a tax of three per centum on the amount of the excess of such income over $600; and upon the income, rents or dividends accruing upon property, &c., owned in the United States by any citizen residing abroad a tax of five per cent. The act of March 3, 1863, (12 U. S. Stat. (ib. p. 473,) and section 90 directed to be levied and collected a tax of three per centum on the annual income of every person residing in the United States over $600 and not exceeding $10,000, and exceeding $10,000 a tax of five per centum; and upon the income of citizens residing abroad a tax of five per centum. The next section provided that the portion of income received, among other things from interest on bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness of any railroad company or other corporation, which shall have been assessed and paid by said company, shall be deducted from that prescribed in the previous section; and section 91 directs that this tax on the bonds and evidences of indebtedness shall be paid by the company, and may deduct the same on the payment of interest to the bondholders. The next is the act of June 30, 1864, (ib. 18, p. 223, section 116,) and directs the levy and collection of a tax of five per centum upon the income of every person residing in the United States, or of any citizen residing abroad, over $600 and under $5,000; 7½ per centum over $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, and a tax of 10 per centum over $10,000. The next section provides for the same deduction from the income arising out of bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of railroad companies as in the act of July 1, 1862, and for the payment of the same by the companies. This act was in force when the coupons in question fell due, and is the one by which the tax of five per centum upon the income of the bondholder must be determined. The Court below held that the act did not include a non-resident alien, and directed a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, which we think was a decision was placed mainly on the ground that, looking at the several provisions bearing upon the question, and giving to them a reasonable construction, it was intended by the Congress of the United States to impose an income tax on non-resident aliens; that they were not only not included in the description of persons upon whom the tax was imposed, but were included in and by omitting to provide for the United States and citizens residing abroad, and that the deduction from the prescribed income of the interest on the railroad bonds, when paid by the companies, was expressly confined to the citizens of the United States of the income tax. We concur in this view. It is not important, however, to pursue the argument, as Congress has since in express terms, by the acts of March 3 and July 20, 1866, imposed a tax upon non-resident landholders. The question hereafter will be not whether the taxes embrace the alien non-resident holder, but whether it is competent for Congress to impose it, upon which we express no opinion. The judgment of the Court below affirmed.

Mr. Justice CLIFFORD dissenting. I dissent from the opinion and judgment of the Court in this case, because I think the taxes in question, both State and Federal, were legally assessed, and that the officers of the Railroad Company properly deducted the same from the amount of the coupons claimed in the declaration. Concurring, Mr. Justice SWAYNE.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—APRIL 20.

Before Presiding Justice Clerke and Judges Ingraham and Sutherland.

LIABILITY OF RAILROAD COMPANIES FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF CONDUCTORS.

Patrick Murphy vs. The Forty-second-street and Grand-street Ferry Railroad Company.—This case came before the Court to-day on an appeal from a decision made by Judge Peckham at the Circuit. The case was tried at the June Circuit, 1867, before that Judge and a jury. The facts as elicited in the trial are briefly as follows: On the 16th of February, 1866, the plaintiff, a laboring man residing in West Twenty-eighth-street, was one of defendant's cars at the corner of Twenty-eighth-street and Broadway, at about 7 o'clock A. M., to ride down to his place of business in Fulton-ferry, and was soon after attacked in a violent manner by the conductor, the latter making an assault upon plaintiff with a knife. The plaintiff was seriously injured, and to escape further injuries he ran out of the car. Testimony was given tending to show that the attack was entirely unjustifiable and unprovoked, and that the conductor was drunk when he made it. The affair created considerable excitement at the time, and we find among the law reports of our columns for the issue of Feb. 18, 1868, the following: "Police Court—Before Justice Ledwith—Car Conductor Stabbing his Passenger.—On the hand, intelligence was received that one of the cars running on the Cross-town Railroad was passing along Fourth-street, near Fourth-avenue, the conductor, named John Lyon, became involved in a quarrel with a passenger, named Patrick Murphy. Being excited, Lyon drew a knife from his pocket, and attempted to argue the point by stabbing Patrick Murphy, residing at No. 104 East Twenty-eighth-street, in the hand, inflicting a wound that will probably result in the amputation of two of the fingers. Mr. Thomas Handley, residing at No. 318 West Twenty-fifth-street, attempted to quell the disturbance, and he was stabbed by the conductor also in the back. Wm. Knapp, of No. 9 Irving-place, was stabbed by Lyon in the mouth. As soon as possible an alarm was given by the passengers the occurrence causing considerable commotion. Officer Welsh, of the Fifteenth Precinct, ran into the street, and, after stopping the car, arrested Lyon, with the knife still in his hand. Some time, when he was secured by a friend of the conductor, afterward jerked the knife from the policeman, and escaped with it. The prisoner, on being examined, was committed for trial in default of $1,000 bail."

The plaintiff in his testimony says that he saw the conductor was drunk as soon as he got into the car. There was some dispute about change between the conductor and a passenger other than the plaintiff. The passenger threatened to report the conductor at the office. The conductor's name was John Lyon. Plaintiff continued his testimony as follows: The conductor said: "If you report me I will kill you; I will knock you down now; before we get to the Fifth-avenue the conductor struck the man and they had quite a scuffle; with that he came down from his office, but he could not get an officer, and we all got on the car and the car started again; between Twenty-third-street and the Fourth-avenue the car was stopped again for an officer, and the officer shoved the conductor on the car, and told the driver to go ahead with the car; the conductor came in on the corner of Fourteenth-street and Broadway, and he came down the car; I was sitting down on the inside of the car, and I stepped out on the front platform; with that some of the gentlemen on the car called them, and I brought the conductor out on the front platform, and he pushed the other one. He stepped on the car and separated them; this man stopped the conductor of No. 1; I was standing on the front platform, and I said to the driver: 'Go on, go on, I don't want to be involved in this fight; I guess you can conduct the car, and I will drive it down the town;' I was going down to Canal-street by Broadway; I said to the driver I would have nothing to do with it; it was not his place, and I had no more; I stood with my hand on the break, and I believe one of these gentlemen, Mr. Knapp, said: 'Young man, get out of that way or you will be killed;' with that, I turned around and saw the conductor coming out of the door with a knife in his hand, and I said: 'What do you mean?' with that he met with that knife, he said: 'Yes, you son of a bitch, I'll cut you;' I got a blow on my hand; with that, I ran to the side walk, and he followed me in the street."

The plaintiff claimed damages in the sum of $10,000. In the complaint there are three counts, the first one alleging negligence in not delivering the plaintiff at his place of business, the second for wrongful and willful assault of plaintiff from the defendant's servant, for which action is alleged under the statute, section 1, title 15, chapter 20, part 3, as follows:

"The owners of every stagecoach or other carriage for the conveyance of passengers, shall be liable severally and severally to the party injured, in all cases for all injuries done or damage done by any driver or other employment of such owner or owners, as a driver while driving such carriage, to any person, or to the property of any person, and that whether the act occasioning the injury or damage shall have been wilful or wanton, or otherwise, in the same manner as such driver would be liable."

The answer made by the Railroad Company was a general denial.

The case came before Judge Peckham, the plaintiff's counsel said he did not see he could bring this case within the provisions of the Revised Statutes, above cited, but that Court held that the defendants, a corporation, could be sued for the injuries the plaintiff. The jury could not recover beyond a mere nominal sum. It was an unfortunate affair for the plaintiff, but the Railroad Company had nothing to do with it. The conductor had been dismissed, and, if he other question arised against the tax the defendants would call. It this were an open question we should have concurred with the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the opinion they have given the views of the plaintiff's counsel. There acts, as expounded, tax "money owing by insolvent debtors, or secured by promissory note, penal or single bill, bond or judgment, and twenty cents on every dollar collected of the principal, payable out of the interest, and it is made the duty of the President or other officer of the Company to pay the tax to the collector or Internal Revenue Collector to retain the amount of the tax. Nor shall we inquire into the construction of the Legislature of Maryland, attempting to impose this tax upon the principal, as we think it plain that it is objectionable upon other grounds. We think it will be conceded by all that the tax upon the promissory note or bond, given by the resident debtor, and the withholding of the amount from the creditor, is a tax upon the creditor, which, if collected, is to be a tax upon the non-resident creditor. It is not a tax of the money paid, because that belongs to the resident debtor, for which he is taxable; it is a tax on the consideration of the bond, which is in the hands of the non-resident holder.

The ground upon which we place the objection to this case is the fact is, in brief, that the bonds in question were issued by a corporation created by the State of Maryland, by the act of consolidation, transferred it with its franchises and other interests, connected therewith, including their stock to the new organization which have issued these bonds. The security, therefore, pledged and bound for the payment of them and of the interest, consisted in the franchises of the road, and, in case of a failure to pay the principal or interest, this portion, with its franchises and fixtures, would be liable to sale in satisfaction of bonds and interest. Now, it is apparent, if the State of Pennsylvania is at liberty to tax these bonds, that, to the extent of this Maryland portion of the road, she is taxing property and interests which are not within her jurisdiction. They are wholly tax-free as effectually as if it were situate within her own limits. The Maryland portion is not liable for the payment of any portion of the bonds, and, therefore, none can be made, in the taxation, with reference to the line within the respective jurisdictions of the States. If the tax is permitted as it respects one bond, it must be as it respects all. Again, if Pennsylvania can tax these bonds upon the same principle Maryland can tax them. This is too apparent to require argument. The only difference in the two cases is that the line of the road is longer within the limits of the former than within the latter. Her tax would be a more marked one beyond the jurisdiction of the State, as the property and interests outside of its limits would be larger. The consequence of this tax of three mills on the dollar would be double taxation of the bondholder. Each State could tax the entire issue of bonds, amounting, as we have seen, to $2,500,000. The effect of taxation upon the bondholder is readily seen. A tax of three mills per dollar of the principal, at an interest of six per centum, payable semi-annually, is less in amount than a tax of twenty per centum; and, therefore, if this consolidation of the line of road had been made into New-York, instead of Pennsylvania, the deduction would have been thirty or forty. If Pennsylvania must tax bonds of this description, she must confine it to bonds issued exclusively to her own incorporations. Our conclusion on this branch of the case is, that to permit the deduction of the tax from the coupons in question would be giving effect to the acts of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, upon property and interests lying beyond her jurisdiction. The next question is whether or not the coupons were subject to a tax of five per centum per annum to the United States on the 1st of July, 1866, when they became due? The first income tax was imposed by the act of Congress passed Aug. 5, 1861, (12 U. S. Stat. p. 309.) The forty-ninth section of that act directed to be levied and collected upon the annual income of every person residing in the United States, from whatever source derived, a tax of three per centum on the amount of the excess of such income over $600; and upon the income, rents or dividends accruing upon property, &c., owned in the United States by any citizen residing abroad a tax of five per cent. The act of March 3, 1863, (12 U. S. Stat. (ib. p. 473,) and section 90 directed to be levied and collected a tax of three per centum on the annual income of every person residing in the United States over $600 and not exceeding $10,000, and exceeding $10,000 a tax of five per centum; and upon the income of citizens residing abroad a tax of five per centum. The next section provided that the portion of income received, among other things from interest on bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness of any railroad company or other corporation, which shall have been assessed and paid by said company, shall be deducted from that prescribed in the previous section; and section 91 directs that this tax on the bonds and evidences of indebtedness shall be paid by the company, and may deduct the same on the payment of interest to the bondholders. The next is the act of June 30, 1864, (ib. 18, p. 223, section 116,) and directs the levy and collection of a tax of five per centum upon the income of every person residing in the United States, or of any citizen residing abroad, over $600 and under $5,000; 7½ per centum over $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, and a tax of 10 per centum over $10,000. The next section provides for the same deduction from the income arising out of bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of railroad companies as in the act of July 1, 1862, and for the payment of the same by the companies. This act was in force when the coupons in question fell due, and is the one by which the tax of five per centum upon the income of the bondholder must be determined. The Court below held that the act did not include a non-resident alien, and directed a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, which we think was a decision was placed mainly on the ground that, looking at the several provisions bearing upon the question, and giving to them a reasonable construction, it was intended by the Congress of the United States to impose an income tax on non-resident aliens; that they were not only not included in the description of persons upon whom the tax was imposed, but were included in and by omitting to provide for the United States and citizens residing abroad, and that the deduction from the prescribed income of the interest on the railroad bonds, when paid by the companies, was expressly confined to the citizens of the United States of the income tax. We concur in this view. It is not important, however, to pursue the argument, as Congress has since in express terms, by the acts of March 3 and July 20, 1866, imposed a tax upon non-resident landholders. The question hereafter will be not whether the taxes embrace the alien non-resident holder, but whether it is competent for Congress to impose it, upon which we express no opinion. The judgment of the Court below affirmed.

Mr. Justice CLIFFORD dissenting. I dissent from the opinion and judgment of the Court in this case, because I think the taxes in question, both State and Federal, were legally assessed, and that the officers of the Railroad Company properly deducted the same from the amount of the coupons claimed in the declaration. Concurring, Mr. Justice SWAYNE.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—APRIL 20.

Before Presiding Justice Clerke and Judges Ingraham and Sutherland.

LIABILITY OF RAILROAD COMPANIES FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF CONDUCTORS.

Patrick Murphy vs. The Forty-second-street and Grand-street Ferry Railroad Company.—This case came before the Court to-day on an appeal from a decision made by Judge Peckham at the Circuit. The case was tried at the June Circuit, 1867, before that Judge and a jury. The facts as elicited in the trial are briefly as follows: On the 16th of February, 1866, the plaintiff, a laboring man residing in West Twenty-eighth-street, was one of defendant's cars at the corner of Twenty-eighth-street and Broadway, at about 7 o'clock A. M., to ride down to his place of business in Fulton-ferry, and was soon after attacked in a violent manner by the conductor, the latter making an assault upon plaintiff with a knife. The plaintiff was seriously injured, and to escape further injuries he ran out of the car. Testimony was given tending to show that the attack was entirely unjustifiable and unprovoked, and that the conductor was drunk when he made it. The affair created considerable excitement at the time, and we find among the law reports of our columns for the issue of Feb. 18, 1868, the following: "Police Court—Before Justice Ledwith—Car Conductor Stabbing his Passenger.—On the hand, intelligence was received that one of the cars running on the Cross-town Railroad was passing along Fourth-street, near Fourth-avenue, the conductor, named John Lyon, became involved in a quarrel with a passenger, named Patrick Murphy. Being excited, Lyon drew a knife from his pocket, and attempted to argue the point by stabbing Patrick Murphy, residing at No. 104 East Twenty-eighth-street, in the hand, inflicting a wound that will probably result in the amputation of two of the fingers. Mr. Thomas Handley, residing at No.

Internal Revenue Decisions.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, April 12, 1869.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 8th inst., inclosing a printed decision rendered by you in the case of The United States vs. MOSES ROSENFIELD, charged with selling chewing tobacco without affixing to the wrapper, or package containing the same, proper internal revenue stamps; and wishing to be informed whether said decision is in accordance with my views of the construction of the law cited.

In reply I have to say that I fully concede with you in the construction which you have placed upon the provisions of sections 63, 78 and 71 of the act of July 20, 1868.

These provisions of law are no doubt stringent; they are, nevertheless, plain and positive, and their enforcement is required no less for the protection of honest manufacturers against competitors who evade the revenue of the Government and prevent trade.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed,) E. DELANO,
Commissioner.
WM. D. WILKINS, Esq.,
U. S. Commissioner, Detroit, Mich.

A meeting of the Federal Council of the Zollverein has been called in Berlin for the 26th inst.

The Spanish Minister of Finance has presented the annual Budget to the Cortes. He proposes a reduction upon all prohibitory duties, and the abolition of the salt and tobacco monopolies. The receipts of the Government are estimated at 2,000,000,000 of reals.

The strike among the Belgian miners has ceased, and there is no further prospect of rioting. It does not appear, however, that the demands of the men for an advance of pay have been complied with.

CUBA.

The news from Havana appears to be quite favorable to the insurgents. It is said they are besieging Trinidad, and have cut off communications on the land side. It is also rumored that a steamer from Nassau has landed a large quantity of arms and ammunition for them. Reports are received of the burning of plantations by the rebels—probably those of persons known to be inimical to the cause, which, indeed, is understood to be the position of most of the planters.

Subsequent telegrams, however, take the gloss off all these fine statements, since in them it is asserted that three of the principal rebel chieftains, with six hundred of their followers, have voluntarily surrendered to the Spanish authorities.

VENEZUELA.

Our correspondent at Curacoa sends us the news from Venezuela to March 31. Congress had just elected BUENEO MONAGAS and GUZZLERMA TELL VILLEGAS first and second Designados, the former being the civil and the latter the military head of the Government. At Coro there was some dissatisfaction, and an outbreak lasting two days occurred, the disturbance partaking more of the nature of a riot for plunder than a rebellion. MONAGAS had already commenced imprisoning his rivals for the Presidency, one of his victims being his cousin DESIDERIO MONAGAS. General ARANA had organized an incipient rebellion in the State of Aragua, but he and his forces were speedily driven to the mountains. Curacoa was being made a depot for the reception of arms and ammunition from Europe and the United States, portions of which were designed for the use of the rebels in Hayti and St. Domingo. The city was also full of revolutionists en route to different scenes of action.

PARAGUAY.

We have intelligence, via Lisbon, that the Paraguayans have had some successes as against the Allies.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday morning, Mr. ROSS took the floor and read a long personal explanation in regard to his late interview with the President. The resolution of Mr. ROSCOE, fixing the adjournment on Thursday, at 4 o'clock, was next discussed. Mr. SUMNER and Mr. POMEROY thought the public business could not be disposed of by that time. Mr. MORRILL expressed a contrary opinion. He understood that all the nominations would be sent in that day; and these could be confirmed and the treaties ratified in three hours. Mr. FESSENDEN moved a slight modification of the resolution, which was then carried by a vote of yeas 22 to nays 24. The Senate then went into Executive Session; and, when the doors were reopened, adjourned.

GENERAL.

There have been accounts of great storms from almost every part of the continent, within the past few days. In St. Louis, Mo., a hailstorm has destroyed nearly $100,000 worth of property. Dubuque, Iowa, has suffered severely, a tornado having thrown down houses, killed or injured several persons, and done other miscellaneous mischief. In Indianapolis the freight depot was blown down, a watchman killed, and several persons badly crushed. Among the latter was a Universalist minister, who had taken refuge in the building from the storm. From the Dominion we have a string of telegrams giving accounts of extensive floods, caused by the rain gorging the rivers. Lands are overflowed in all directions. In and around Montreal especially the damage caused by the rising waters of the St. Lawrence is said to be incalculable.

In the United States Circuit Court at Baltimore, yesterday, Judge CHASE presiding, the great case of KIMBERLY against General B. F. BUTLER came up. The Court was principally occupied with a discussion on the construction of the word "arrest," in the Constitution, and the privilege of a member of Congress in being exempt from arrest. This point was argued on demurrer to the plea in abatement. A plea of limitation was also set up.

Fourteen dwellings at Schuylkill Falls, Penn., occupied principally by railroad laborers, were burned yesterday.

A Washington correspondent says that Admiral POORER ridicules the idea that any increased naval force had been ordered to Cuba. He said no orders had been given to place all the available vessels at the New-England navy-yards in immediate readiness for sea. He stated that the intention was to relieve all the vessels on duty on the Cuban coast monthly during the Summer, so as not to expose the crews too long to the dreaded yellow fever, which sometimes decimates them during the hot season; but that as soon as one vessel arrived there another would be ordered home, and that the naval force in Cuban waters would not be increased.

Hon. JOSIAH STEVENS, Secretary of State of New Hampshire from 1823 to 1843, died at Concord, on Saturday evening, of disease of the kidneys, which terminated rapidly after a few days' illness. He was a native of Newport, New-Hampshire, born in 1794, and aged 75 years.

Congress having appropriated $7,500 for repairing the Mount Vernon property, workmen were dispatched from Washington on Monday to perform the necessary work. The old Washington mansion is to be put in order and partially refurnished.

The counting-room of GAGE, PORTER & Co., saw manufacturers, at Fisherville, N. H., was entered on Saturday night, and a large safe therein blown open with powder. Two thousand five hundred dollars in money and a large amount of United States and Boscawen town bonds were carried off; also deposits of people in the vicinity to a considerable amount. The total loss is about $7,000.

The examination in relation to the alleged forged checks, signed with the name of JAY COOKE, was continued yesterday at the Tombs Police Court. The Superior Court, Trial Term, was adjourned yesterday in consequence of the sudden illness of Justice MCCUNN.

Yesterday maintained the fitful character of April. It opened like a Summer morning, became windy and raw in the afternoon, and closed with rain, which began violently at nine o'clock, and lasted, with little intermission, for an hour. It continued with more or less modification throughout the night.

At a meeting of the College of the City of New-York held yesterday morning, resolutions of respect to the memory of Professor OWEN were unanimously adopted.

Sugars declined an ⅛ cent. ℔ lb. Spirits Turpentine was dull and lower. Strained Rosin actively sought after at buoyant rates. Petroleum in light supply, and wanted at rising prices. Tobacco in good demand. Freights quiet.

The Civil Service—The Only Remedy.

The warmest upholders of our present system of appointment to office must agree that the spectacle recently presented in Washington has been peculiarly disgraceful. To find that city crowded with men who are eager applicants for offices to which they have not the smallest adaptation, to hear of the Vice-President so badgered by these unblushing place-hunters that he is obliged to abandon his official position and take refuge in the country, and that even the iron constitution of the President sinks under this incessant and shameless importunity for office, and Congress is glad to adjourn to escape it—is certainly altogether one of the most unpleasant pictures we have had in a long time of the tendency of our method of filling public offices.

Along with this spectacle, which is calculated to bring disgrace everywhere on republican institutions, come the thousand complaints and proofs from all sides of the utter demoralization of our civil service. Our most trustworthy officials estimate that the public losses from the incompetence and dishonesty of the public servants, amount now every year, to the enormous sum of one hundred millions of dollars. In other words, of every four dollars paid by the poorest citizen in taxes, one is stolen by rogues or lost by incompetents. Every man, woman and child suffers from this degradation of the public service. It is paid for in the hard earnings of the poor, by the salaries of the professional classes and the wealth of the rich. All lose from it. Worse even than this, it corrupts character and disturbs honest industry. The buying and selling of offices is depraving every department of Government, and casting far and wide the seeds of corruption. We see the effects in Albany, in every State Capital, and at Washington. Names that ought to be the most honored are not free from its stains. The public is losing the sense of manly independence and high-toned honor, under the influence of this scramble for office and bargaining with public positions. Young men are continually leaving pursuits of industry and honest production for this waiting for chances—this drawing of prizes. The system has become a curse and a disgrace to the country. That great political philosopher and economist, J. STUART MILL, rightly characterized it recently, in a public letter, as "the one great blot and disgrace on American institutions."

What is worst, too, in the whole matter, the evil will continually increase. There never was such an undignified scramble for place as this year; there was never more jobbery and corruption, and never more difficulty and seeming impossibility in filling the right place with the right man. Four years hence the spectacle at Washington will be only more degrading, the scramble more disgraceful, the jobs and bargains more corrupt, and the inefficiency of the public servants more glaring—simply because the number of offices will become each year greater, the prizes richer and the public sense of honor more dulled under the present system. This is evidently the inevitable drift of things in this country.

There is but one practical remedy for this state of things; and that is the entire change of the mode of appointment to places of public trust.

This can be secured only by the adoption of the system begun so favorably in Great Britain—of appointment by examination, and not by favor or from party service; or, in other words, the passage of Mr. JENCKES' bill. Yet we cannot say that the prospects of this most salutary measure are very hopeful. What Mr. MILL calls "the greatest perverters of free institutions"—the professional politicians—control both Houses of Congress and all the machinery of elections. Two hundred and twenty men could not, with the utmost care, be picked out from the population of the whole Union, who are by interest, habit and tradition, so opposed to the principles of this bill as the members of the present House of Representatives. The Senate, too, has its own grounds of opposition. The President, indeed, is on the side of the bill, and a vast and growing constituency of intelligent men and the opinion of the civilized world. But all these allies are as yet weak against the professional politicians.

Moreover, there are among the masses certain unfounded prejudices against the measure. It is stigmatized as "English," though it might more properly be called "Chinese," appointment by examination being a custom of the Celestial Empire as old as the Norman conquest. It has given the English an honest Custom-house, a Post Office which is unequalled in the world for accuracy and rapidity, and a most intelligent Indian administration. We have received too many good things from the little island to object, if we at length obtain an honest civil service from the same source.

Mr. JENCKES' bill, it is said, will establish "an aristocracy of officials." But this has been a measure in England which was most of all a yet of the Liberal Party, and was at first opposed by the aristocracy. It does away with favoritism and appointment by blood or by personal or party influence. It comes down to the true democracy of intelligence and character. To establish "a profession" of office-holders—a trained body of men of character and fitness for their places, with the esprit du corps of a regular profession, is what is most of all needed in this country. The sooner we have such an "aristocracy," the better for us all.

It is urged, too, that it is a mere measure of "pedantry," making book-learning the great test for public service. This is a mistake. In the British competitive examinations, an expert in every department is present at the examination of the applicants in his own branch. Moreover, character and bodily health are both made tests, and, on a broad scale, it is found that intellectual training is, to a certain extent, a pledge of character. But the advantage of the examination in ordinary school-branches is, that the public secures at least a respectable education in its servants, and this, with character, health, and the tested knowledge of the practical branch aimed at, makes a better basis for eventual selection than the fact that the applicant is a friend of a Congressman, or has made a stump speech for the party. Mr. JENCKES' bill, we believe, provides that all those who attain the certificates of the Examining Board shall alone form the class from whom the final selection is to be made; so that we shall have, then, a trained class of office-seekers, who can apply without any loss of self-respect, and whose appointment entails no corruption or jobbery.

This great reform is, perhaps, too profound to be expected speedily. But everything may be expected, in an intelligent community like ours, from discussion. When we remember what discussion has accomplished within two years, in exposing "the greenback heresy," we may hope, in time, even for the success of "competitive examinations."

Secret Sessions of the Senate.

A Committee has been appointed in the Senate to inquire how the Hale-Perry correspondence came to be published in the newspapers. "The object of the Committee," we are told, "is to ascertain where the newspapers obtained the correspondence, and why they so far forgot their duty to society as to publish it." We respectfully submit that the latter clause of their inquiry is none of the Senate's business. What "duty" newspapers owe "to society," and whether they perform it properly or not, is their affair; the Senate has no more to do with it than it has with the duties of our Common Council or of the Erie Railroad.

The correspondence in question was sent into the Senate, and considered in Executive Session, under the pledge on the part of each Senator that its contents should not be divulged. They were divulged,—the correspondence itself was published,—as a matter of course by some one of the Senators. It is quite proper for the Committee to inquire what Senator thus violated his pledge of honor, and betrayed the confidence of the body to which he belongs; but it has no business to go beyond this. A newspaper is under no obligation to keep secret any proceedings of the Senate, or to suppress any official documents, that may come into its possession. Good taste and a sense of propriety may dictate that it should do so under certain circumstances, but that is a matter for the editor of the newspaper, and for its readers to decide; the Senate has nothing whatever to do with it.

The fact that all the proceedings of the Senate in Executive Session are regularly disclosed and made public, would naturally suggest the absurdity of keeping up such a hollow sham any longer. It simply allows certain newspapers to trade on the lack of honor of certain Senators.

The Treasury and Its Surplus Gold.

The Tribune calls the attention of Secretary BOUTWELL to the provision of the Sinking Fund law of 1862 requiring the purchase or payment of one per cent. of the entire debt annually with which to form a sinking fund. "We are confident," says our contemporary, "that this section has never been repealed, as it certainly should not have been. And, if not, we ask that it be now regarded and obeyed." It is to be regretted that under the late Administration this wholesome requirement was systematically neglected. Whether it be now available, however, is a question evidently doubtful. For though never in terms repealed, a clause in the Public Credit act, which became law last month, seems to forbid the buying or paying off of any portion of the bonded debt at present. The clause to which we refer enacts that

"None of the said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such time United States notes shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin."

Inasmuch as greenbacks are not yet convertible into coin, and the process of funding at a lower rate of interest is for the time impracticable, the prohibition here set forth appears to be operative against bond-redemption by the Treasury for any purpose whatever. No exception is made in favor of the Sinking Fund provision which the Tribune urges Mr. BOUTWELL to apply. That comes under the head of the transaction which the measure of the late session explicitly forbids.

The failure to make the Sinking Fund a special exemption is perhaps to be regretted. But the wisdom of the prohibition in its general scope is, in our opinion, manifest. It restrains the Secretary precisely where he needs restraint, and renders comparatively powerless many of the financial quacks who are pressing him to do something to help forward their cherished crotchets. The Tribune, for instance, is uneasy because the surplus gold in the Treasury is not employed in redeeming bonds or greenbacks; and only the force of law prevents a regular attack upon Mr. BOUTWELL in furtherance of these ends. As it is, his hands are tied—tied, we think, properly. He may neither contract the greenback circulation nor expend the proceeds of exhaustive taxation in paying off bonds in advance of their maturity. In other words, he may not wantonly disturb the movements of finance or make bond-buying a feature of the Treasury business, to the neglect of other interests and duties.

Nevertheless, it is incumbent on Mr. BOUTWELL to adopt some judicious and consistent method of disposing of surplus gold. His plan of anticipating interest on bonds is, obviously, a failure. Bondholders who have invested their means with a view to a high rate of interest, have nothing to gain by submitting to a rebate in consideration of being paid in April what becomes due in May or June; and speculators would be prejudiced rather than helped by compliance. Some other means must be adopted, if the Secretary's aim is to counteract gold gambling and arrest the upward tendency of the premium. And we see none else available than the sale of gold, subject to regulations which shall prevent the scandal of Mr. MCCULLOCH's administration, and give the public the full benefit of an addition to the coin circulation.

So long as the present financial system continues, it will be the duty of the Secretary to do something toward regulating the operations of the gold market. Recent legislation deprived the gamblers of one resource, but only constant watchfulness on the part of the Treasury can effectually checkmate their daily movements. Sufficient gold should be sold to accomplish this purpose—and no more. Experience has shown that it is not in the power of the Treasury, by contraction or by any other device, to force down greatly the price of gold; other causes, over which neither Secretaries nor enactments exercise control, alone can bring us nearer the point to which resumption will be feasible. But it is in Mr. BOUTWELL's power, by public sales of gold, to frustrate the bull movement now in progress, and steadily to prevent speculative interference with the influences which gradually tend toward the restoration of financial soundness. This, however, is essential: the combinations and influences which surrounded and corrupted Mr. MCCULLOCH must be discarded by his successor. We fear that the shadow of their presence is still in some things discernible, and on Mr. BOUTWELL's ability to cast them off and pursue a course from which quacks and speculators shall be alike excluded, depends both the character and success of any policy he may adopt.

We have said that Treasury sales should be restricted to the amounts needed from time to time to prevent merely speculative advances of the premium. This for two reasons: First, while it is possible to mitigate the effects of gold gambling, it is not possible to permanently depreciate the premium below the point to which it may be forced by what may be called natural causes; second, in the midst of uncertainties, commercial, financial and political, it is important that the Treasury reserve be kept considerably above the mark which in ordinary circumstances would suffice for the purposes of the Government. If, after making allowance for the necessities of the Government, thus increased, and for the probable contingencies of the Gold market, a surplus still remain in the Treasury, we shall regard that surplus as the measure of the excess of taxation to be dealt with next session, apart from savings that may be effected by retrenchment or other methods of reform.

The Sheriff's Plunder Bill.

We are not greatly surprised, and are greatly gratified, to learn that the indignant protest made by all the leading journals, and by the whole population of the City, against the pending bill to increase the Sheriff's fees, has not been without effect. The bill seems to have been pushed through the Assembly in such a way that most of those who voted for it were not at all aware of its real character. But in the Senate it finds an obstacle, which is likely to be insurmountable, in the character of the Committee which has it in charge. Senators FOLGER and HALE were both certain to resist it on account of its intrinsic character, and because they have no such party relations to the case as would lead them to act on it against their personal judgments. Senator MURPHY, who is a Democrat, but who is also a just and fair-minded man, also opposes this bill on the ground that it aims at a very gross public injustice and extortion, in the interest of private rapacity. He acts on his responsibility as a Senator, and prefers to discharge his duty to the public rather than consult the interests of his party, or feed the grasping avarice of any of its members.

Senator WILLIAMS, a Republican Senator from Cayuga County, on the other hand, gives the bill, we understand, his support. No one who is at all familiar with his official character and career will be surprised at this, or at all doubtful as to the considerations which lead him to take this course. It is in keeping with his usual course.

Mr. Ashley's Case Again.

The Napoleon (Ohio) Signal rejoices, with great fervor, over the nomination and confirmation of J. M. ASHLEY, to be Governor of Montana, and treats it as a refutation of all the charges made against him by his enemies. "And here we again take occasion to say," says the Signal, "that Mr. ASHLEY's enemies have never yet substantiated a charge of corruption against him, or shown that he has ever taken a cent of money unlawfully or corruptly from any source."

Literally speaking, this is true. But it is also true, and the Signal hints, no doubt, of the fact, that Mr. ASHLEY, Chairman of the Committee on Territories in the House, proposed in writing to Mr. CASE, whom he was trying to get appointed Surveyor of a Western Territory, that they should go into partnership in speculating in town lots, that they should both use their official positions and powers to promote that joint speculation, and that they should make an equal division of the proceeds.

We know nothing about the Napoleon Signal or the code of morality by which it pretends to be governed. But it evidently does not consider it at all wrong to devise and enter upon a corrupt scheme unless it results in actual profit. It was all right for Mr. ASHLEY to offer himself officially for sale, and as it has not been proved that he actually got his price, he must be held to be morally guiltless. A burglar commits no crime in attempting to rob a house, unless he actually gets a certain amount of cash thereby.

We beg to remind that high-toned Western journal that even the law recognizes such an offence as an attempt to commit crime, whether it prove successful or not. And if there be such a thing as a code of political morals, it can do no less. Of that offence Mr. ASHLEY was guilty. The evidence of his guilt stands on the official records of Congress, and all the party indorsements in Christendom cannot blot it out.

The May Migration.

That detestable period which, by law and custom, has been assigned for the process of annually turning a large part of our population out of house and home, is now at hand. An English nobleman has lately been urging a panacea for the ills of the English working-classes in a proposed revival of May-day sports and festivities. May-day sports and festivities! What irony that language would convey, as applied to our May-day occupations. Certainly, we would hail any English nobleman or American commoner as a public benefactor to all classes, who could give us, not games and feasts, but simple respite from the crazy whirl and rush of the May moving.

Already the streets begin to be cumbered with trucks laden with furniture—the advance-guard of the great host that is to follow behind. But these pioneers are fortunate. The pitiable part of the community are the helpless housekeepers and storekeepers who cannot get out of their present dwellings until the 1st of May, and on the same day must hurry into their new ones. They are already groaning over the prospect.

What an absurd and mischievous custom! If some satirist like SWIFT should give an account of a fanciful country, in which a great part of the people exchanged houses all at once in the Spring of the year, and should depict the "scenes of confusion and creature complaints" that may be witnessed any May-day in New-York, and will be witnessed here ten days hence, we should pronounce that to be a very much abused population.

Some arguments there are, of course, in favor of settling upon a single day in the year for universal hiring and letting. It sets at rest, probably, some legal disputes which might arise in careless leases; and it certainly gives tenants a greater choice of houses to hire than they would otherwise get. But, on the other hand, it cuts them all adrift, also, on the same day; it makes the scramble for houses tenfold more irksome and confusing. So soon as a desirable house is offered for rent, a hundred applicants are after it, and anything like leisurely or deliberate selection is out of the question. And economy as well as comfort is trenched upon by this wretched custom. It is very much easier, under these circumstances, for powerful combinations of owners to put up prices, temporarily at least, and so give an inflated value to all property that can be rented.

Whatever way you look at it, the tenant is the chief sufferer by this process. Suppose his old lease expires, and his new lease of another house begins, on the 1st of May. It is only by some fortunate accident or skillful combination (as, for example, getting an unoccupied house) that he can move his household goods and effects to his new dwelling. The thoroughfares are thick with drays, and his carmen are in collision with the carmen of the man who is going out of the new abode, and with those of the man who is coming into the old one. It is only those who pass through the annoyance in its full effects that can really appreciate what a nuisance this custom is. And let us, in fine, make one of several aggravating suppositions, such as many an anxious housekeeper is now contemplating—let us say—suppose it rains!

It is perfectly well known, too, that not only carmen but all sorts of laborers, and most sorts of mechanics, increase their prices for work on and about the first of May in a very large ratio. They are not to be blamed for doing so. They must be had, at whatever price. They need no recondite rules of political economy regarding the relation of demand and supply and prices, to know that they are at liberty to charge very high rates. In some cases, the May-day charges are so enormous as to make a serious matter for a small income. But the trouble is solely with the custom itself; and it is difficult to show any other which has so little to recommend it, compared with its nuisances and its costs.

The Bill in a Nutshell.

Toward the end of the Fortieth Congress a bill was introduced into the House for the division of the Territory of Utah among the adjoining States and Territories. It being reported by telegraph as a proposition of Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, and its object being set forth as the restriction of the growth of polygamy, by taking away the unoccupied parts of BRIGHAM YOUNG'S domains, and so stopping the latter's "empire-founding" project, it was discussed on its merits in many quarters.

But, when the telegraphic error was corrected, and we were told that the originator of this bill was Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, the tone of comment wonderfully changed. It was taken for granted that there was a cat under the Mormon meal, and the question was, what "cat." A correspondent of the TIMES, in this public perplexity as to "what ASHLEY was after," made this suggestion: "The real, though disguised, intent," he said, "is to secure the early admission of Montana as a State of the Union, and a couple of seats in the Senate of the United States to eager aspirants—and herein lies the motive of this remarkable proposition."

We do not think present events have injured this shrewd conjecture. If we turn back to the provisions of the Utah bill, (which was nipped in the bud,) we find that one of its most remarkable features is largely increasing the enormous Territory of Montana, adding both to its area and its population, to the injury of the small Territory of Idaho. This was three months ago; so that we may conclude that at that time Mr. ASHLEY, whom his constituents would not send back to Congress from Ohio, had already laid his pipes for the precise position he has now secured. More than that, he, as Chairman of the Committee on Territories, was projecting a gigantic "real estate operation," cutting up Utah and Dakota, and changing the boundaries of eight States and Territories. Who was to do the "surveying" in this business, and whether any arrangement of "half profits" was contemplated in connection with it, we need not inquire, inasmuch as the bill proved abortive, and before the subject was reached the Fortieth Congress was no more.

However, with Montana a State, there would be a short step from the Governorship of the Territory to that of the State, and thence to Senatorial honors. Thus far, at least, all has gone like a charm,—"Hail to thee, thane of Glamis; hail to thee, thane of Cawdor—that shalt be king hereafter." If we do not hear of Senator ASHLEY, of Montana, one of these days, it will not be his fault.

Whether, however, the new Governor will manœuvre to have fresh territory and population added to Montana in order to accelerate his Senatorial honors, or whether he will bide his time in patience, we cannot predict. We should think, however, that, with the present enormous area of his Territory, there would be pickings enough for both himself and CASE, without reviving his project of three months ago.

MINOR TOPICS.

Governor HOFFMAN deserves the support of every honest newspaper in the State, Republican and Democratic, for his resistance to the schemes of plunder which are so rife at Albany.

Fillibusters are being raised in Mexico to go to Cuba and take part in the fight against Spain. What splendid times there would be in Cuba if the Mexican style of things were naturalized there!

The Tribune states that the editor of the Evening Post was nominated for the Austrian Mission by the President, at the personal and urgent request of Hon. JOHN A. GRISWOLD. Some doubt is thrown on this statement by the fact that Mr. GRISWOLD made a personal and persistent effort to secure the nomination of Mr. JOHN M. FRANCIS, editor of the Troy Times, to the Hague; and if his personal wishes were so weighty with General GRANT as the Tribune implies, it is natural to suppose that Mr. FRANCIS would have succeeded. But he did not.

The Spiritualists and bogus-ghost-photographers display a great deal of interest over the case of MUMLER, which will be examined to-day in the Special Sessions Court-room. Judge DOWLING has received a letter from a lady Spiritualist, asking that suitable accommodations be provided for ladies in the Court-room, this being the "first time our belief has been made the subject of judicial determination." She warns the Judge that the "spiritual world" will look after his conduct in the case, and she herself threatens to "address him on the facts as they appear." Let her model her speech on the address of Paul before Felix, and then she may almost persuade the Judge to be a Spiritualist.

The Gladstone party are gaining every point on which the Tories make a contest in reference to the Irish Church Establishment. The astuteness of Mr. DISRAELI in proposing amendments, postponements and modifications, has proved of no avail. The Reformers stand solidly on every occasion. There is little doubt that the Disestablishment bill will pass almost exactly in the form in which Mr. GLADSTONE introduced it.

The investigation into the operations of the alleged quack doctor, (J. WATER SCOTT,) and the nature of his "University," should be carried on until all the facts are developed. We have laws in this State against quackery, but nobody ever heard of their enforcement.

If our Government decides on the capture of Canada in order to settle the Alabama question, we trust it will accept Senator CHANDLER'S proposition and give out the job by contract with the "60,000 veterans of the State of Michigan." In the first place, we should thus feel perfectly sure that it would be done; and in the next place, it would be done at a cheaper rate than in any other way. And in these days of large debt and heavy taxation, economy and retrenchment must not be lost sight of. If we can't have "peace," let our wars be as cheap as possible.

The Board of Health is doing an excellent service in compelling the vacation of cellars which are in an untenantable condition. No one can estimate the vast amount and horrible nature of the disease that is generated by our underground population. The fact that 400 of these places have been deprived of their tenants within a few weeks, is a good sign for the health of the City during the coming hot season.

Senators, we are told, have been trying to get the President to use his influence with members of that body to secure the confirmation of some of his nominees. The General declines, telling them that confirmation is their business; his is nomination. As he proposes to let them alone in the performance of their duty, why can they not let him alone in the performance of his? The pressure of Senators to secure nominations is one of the President's greatest embarrassments.

The Legislature has come to a stopping point on some things. In the Senate, yesterday, a report was presented and sustained against increasing the salaries of the officers and firemen of the Metropolitan Fire Department. Another report was presented against increasing the compensation of deormen of the Metropolitan Police. The Sheriff, however, is still very anxious to have his remuneration raised to a figure befitting his great merits and great labors.

We are pleased to hear from Washington that Secretary BOUTWELL has now come to the conclusion to make no change in the office of Appraiser at this port. In retaining Mr. MCELRATH in the place he has filled so satisfactorily for several years, the Secretary's course will meet the approval of the mercantile community.

Mr. DELOACH, of Memphis, had certainly some merit in saving General GRANT and his escort, once upon a time, at Mr. DELOACH'S plantation, by a wink and a nod toward the city, when news came that the rebs were in the vicinity. But a great deal of the merit is due to the General himself, who was aware of the bad neighborhood, and who wisely pursued his journey rather than wait for a comfortable dinner. Mr. DELOACH deserves the Post Office he has got.

Apropos of the Rhode Island laws against dueling, a correspondent, after reading our paragraph of Monday, would commend to Mr. SPRAGUE and General BURNSIDE—if they are really "spoiling for a fight"—an incident which occurred in their own neighborhood about forty years ago. A couple of Southern law students at Harvard, one of whom was SHOCCO JONES, of North Carolina, a somewhat noted character of the time—after a violent college quarrel, repaired to Rhode Island, to satisfy their honor, and for which, of course, they were both expelled from the Law School. JONES, the challenging party, escaping to North Carolina, the Governor of Rhode Island proclaimed a reward for his arrest and return to answer to the violated laws of the State. On meeting with this formidable document in the newspapers, SIGOOO wrote forthwith to the Governor, to the effect, first, that the proclamation was a fraud upon its very face, since His Excellency had promised to pay five hundred dollars for his arrest, while his salary was only four hundred dollars, and his term of office limited to a single year! And, secondly, that he, JONES, pledged himself never to violate the laws or territory of Rhode Island a second time, for if he should have occasion to fight again in New-England, he would post himself in Massachusetts and his antagonist in Connecticut, "and fire across half—— little State!"

A society has been formed in Boston to reform things generally. It will have a large field to work in; we wish it success.

The Cincinnati Commercial makes a terrible proposal—that New-York shall be the Congressional Capital and publish all the debates through the TIMES and other chief journals here! That night save the country half a million per year; but what would our readers say? As it is, we can scarce find room for the thousand and one items of daily intelligence that go to the making up of a morning paper; and the shovelling in of these debates would exclude half of them, and give the whole concern a waterlogged appearance. No, no; let the country pay that half million for a regular musclean journal—a very good, indispensable thing in its way. But let us keep our newspapers lively enough to "run up all manner of streets," and give the "age and body of the time," &c., &c. New-York is as much of a Metropolis as we can manage just now; and, in fact, must always be the Metropolis—Congress or no Congress.

The "breach of promise of marriage" business occasionally furnishes some curious developments. For example, here is a woman who acknowledges in Court that her career has been so far wayward as to make her the mother of an illegitimate child by an unmarried party, who acknowledges that she "drinks nothing but lager-beer," and who is declared under oath to be a "low character." She brings suit for breach against a hard case, who, when in jail, promised to marry her. On investigating the facts, the Judge has reduced the fisherman's bail to a nominal figure.

After the success of the Spanish revolution and the establishment of a Liberal Government a few months ago, we heard from the leading Liberals of Spain numberless expressions of regard and admiration for this country. Leading men in the Cortes and in the Press were constantly panting to free America as the model for them to copy; and our institutions were eulogised as enthusiastically as our great patriots, from WASHINGTON to GRANT. But now there is a change. The threats of filibustering against Cuba, the Congressional encouragement given to the insurrection, and the desire of aggrandizing ourselves at the expense of Spain, have acted on the feelings of the Spaniards, and are turning their expressions of friendship into expressions of animosity and hatred. This country is now looked on as an enemy, and General BANKS is referred to in terms which involve all the force and fervor of the Spanish language.

There has been a tendency of late, and very naturally, too, in discussing the excitements and intense mental action of the present day, to raise a voice of warning and show how all diseases of a nervous and mental character were on the increase. The growth of insanity has come to be one of the terrors of society, one of the standard arguments against the wide-awake, rapid, vigorous efficiency of the times. Statistical returns from public asylums have seemed to bear out this belief. In England, the Governmental reports show that in 1844 there was one lunatic in every 902 persons; in 1859, one in 461; in 1858, one in 544; in 1863 the proportion was double that of 1844, or one in 452. And yet the Lunacy Commissioners reported in 1861 that they did not think the average of lunacy had increased. And this apparently strange opinion has of late been upheld by Dr. LOCKHART ROBERTSON, who, having very thoroughly studied the returns, the meaning of the facts and figures, says that the stringent modern legislation, which has drawn more and more of the insane poor into public asylums, the facts that the number of insane in private asylums has not proportionately increased, and that the increase in the returns comes from the pauper population, show not that insanity is increasing, but that more care is taken of the insane. The same reasoning doubtless applies in our own case, here in America, and, instead of being frightened at ourselves, we may regard ourselves with increasing complacency—which is pleasant.

Every Saturday afternoon, particularly at the close of the day, large numbers of purchasers of both sexes throng Washington Market, and the other markets also, for the purpose of laying in supplies. Sellers, observing that the custom is best toward evening, take advantage of the more active demand and advance their prices for almost every kind of article. Very few buyers understand this trick of the butchers, the green-grocers, and the hucksters. It would be good policy, therefore, for those who wish to save money in their purchases to visit the markets in the morning instead of waiting until the day has waned.

Musical Notes.

ROSSINI'S MESSE SOLENNELLE.

The preparations for the execution of ROSSINI's "Messe Solennelle"—and they have been on a scale proportionate to the ambitious character of the enterprise—are approaching completion. The first hearing of the maestro's posthumous work will be afforded at the Academy of Music on April 29. The best vocal talent obtainable has been secured, together with an orchestra of unquestionable efficiency and a numerous chorus. Miss CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG, Mme. NATALI TESTA and Signori BORETI and ANTONUCCI are the soloists. All these are popular artistes—a fact that will certainly smoothen the effect of a performance the difficulties of which are manifold.

FRENCH OPERA.

The familiar but still popular works that have constituted the opera bouffe entertainments at the Fifth-avenue Theatre are to be withdrawn after this week shall have terminated. On Monday or Tuesday next "Les Dragons de Villars," a genuine opera comique, by M. HENRI MAILLART, will replace the masterpieces of OFFENBACH. Mlle. IRMA and M. AUJAC are both to sing in the novelty, which was produced with very great success at the Theatre Lyrique, in Paris, about fifteen years ago, and has since occupied an honorable place in the repertoire of that house.

Lecture by Mr. P. T. Barnum.

The "Phelps Lodging-house," Nos. 335 and 337 Elizabeth-street, was filled to overflowing last night by the boys who make it their home, to listen to a lecture from Mr. P. T. BARNUM upon the "Art of Saving Money and Growing Rich." The lecture was in Mr. BARNUM's happiest vein, and illustrated by many incidents drawn from his own experience. His advice to the boys in relation to the disuse of tobacco and ardent spirits, and the necessity of leading an honest life and following some steady, safe employment, was calculated to make a good impression, and, if remembered, tend to good results. At the conclusion of the lecture the boys, by a unanimous vote, returned thanks to the lecturer for the interesting entertainment which he had afforded them.

HAYTI.

An Apology for Outrages Committed on a British Steamer—Salnave and French and English Naval Officers.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamer Port-au-Prince, we have advices from Port-au-Prince to the 10th instant.

The Haytian Government had apologized to the British Government for the outrage committed in the seizure of the mail-bags of the British steamer Cuba, and the opening of the mails at Port-au-Prince. The Moniteur, which is the Government organ, says: "The Government of Hayti regrets that the mail-bags of Her Britannic Majesty, carried by the steamer Cuba, had been seized by the authorities of the port, and opened at the office of the General Police. The Government of Hayti, conformably with the rights of neutrals, has always been willing to respect, and will always respect the mail-bags of the service of Her Britannic Majesty."

A more cordial feeling than had existed for some time has been established between President SALNAVE and the English and French naval officers in command of war vessels at Port-au-Prince. On the 1st inst. Captain GLYN, of the English frigate Doris; Captain ATHELIS, of the English gunboat Jason; Captain DE VARENNES, of the French war vessel d'Estrées, and the Captain of the Bouvet, also French, waited upon the President at the National Palace, in company with the English Chargé d'Affaires at Port-au-Prince, all the Secretaries of State and several officers of SALNAVE's staff being present. The interview is described as being of the most cordial character, the foreign officers giving SALNAVE the strongest assurances of the desire of their respective Governments to maintain the most friendly relations with Hayti. As the visitors retired from the palace, after the reception, a salute of twenty-one guns in honor of the French and English marine was fired by the artillery of the guard. On the following day the English frigate Doris saluted the Haytian flag with twenty-one guns, the compliment being acknowledged by a salve of the same number fired from the National Palace by the artillery of the guard.

The Constitution of Hayti, being practically suspended in consequence of the civil war, President SALNAVE had issued a decree ordering the election of representatives in the Legislature to fill those seats which by death, resignation, or in other ways, had become vacant, so as to enable the legislative bodies to discharge their functions.

A decree had also been issued by the Government forbidding the reëxportation of old iron and old copper, and foreign merchandise. The reason given for this decree is that many parties, under pretence of reëxporting such articles, sent them into the insurgent districts, thereby giving aid and comfort to the rebels. A similar decree has been issued relative to molasses. Another decree issued by the Government required that from the 1st April the export and import duties should be paid in specie.

It had been found necessary to open the port of Petit Goave to foreign commerce, as a measure of relief to the people of the Artibonite, who since the closing of the port of Miragoane had suffered greatly, not only from inability to find sale for their produce, but to procure articles of the first necessity from abroad. Accordingly a decree had appeared in the Moniteur, announcing that as an acknowledgement of the patriotism of the inhabitants of Petit Goave, that port would be opened on the 1st of April.

SALNAVE was at Port-au-Prince when the steamer left that place for New-York. Nothing of importance had taken place in military or naval operations for two or three weeks. Exchange had fallen slightly at Port-au-Prince.

VENEZUELA.

Election of Civil and Military Heads of Government—Outrages and Robberies at Coro—A Rebellion in Aragua.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CURACOA, Thursday, March 11, 1869.

Since writing you on the 16th ult. on Venezuelan affairs, at which time there appeared no prospect of an election of President by Congress, that body has succeeded in electing RUFINO MONARGAS First, and GUILLERMO TELL VILLEGAS Second Designados, the first as the military and the second as the executive head of the Republic, which has given very general satisfaction to the better classes, especially those engaged in commerce and trade. But the country is still very far from peaceful. At Coro, commencing on the 26th ult., they had two days of strife, with, however, more plundering than fighting, and that unhappy country appears to be given up to plunderers, despots, political speculators and rascals of every grade. Government troops arriving from Laguayra and Valentia, succeeded in dispersing the rebel mob, but only probably to gather more strength for a future occasion.

By an arrival, yesterday, from Laguayra, it is rumored that MONARGAS has imprisoned his cousin, DOMINGO MONARGAS, his rival for the Presidency, and also GUSMAN BLANO, Second Designado under General FALCON, and but recently returned from Europe. Thus it is, whoever attains the power must fight for it, and continue to fight to maintain it.

In the State of Aragua there has also been a rising against the Central Government, headed by their President, General ARANA, who was finally forced to flee to the mountains. It is barely possible that Venezuela may escape a general civil war, but partial risings will most likely be the normal condition of that country for a long time to come. The country is filled with petty local chieftains, ready to rise at any time to commit depredations or to satisfy private vengeance.

At this port arms and ammunition are arriving in large quantities, and by every vessel from both the United States and England, which shows very conclusively that our city is filled with revolutionary partisans, belonging not alone to Venezuela, but to Hayti and St. Domingo. Will these nations ever be at peace? I fear not; at least until some strong Power steps in to put an end to this continual strife.

Boating at Harvard College.

From the Boston Advertiser, April 20.

The College crew has fairly begun work, preparatory for the race with Yale. As a matter of course, drawbacks have already appeared respecting both the crew and boats, there being serious doubts as to the qualifications of one man in the six, while the practice-boat—the winner of the race of 1867—is almost rowed to pieces. The crew at present, to say the least, is hardly equal to the magnificent team of last Summer. GEORGE HOLDERNESS, RICHARDS, (the "Farnese Hercules,") WATSON and LORING, the first-named the bow and the latter the stroke, of last year, have returned, as is well known, and only SIMMONS and MCBURNEY remain. HOLDERNESS's place is supplied by WILLIS, SIMMONS rows stroke, and the other places are filled by MCBURNEY, BASS, RICE and CLARK. It will be seen that the new men are WILLIS and the three last named. BASS and RICE will doubtless equal LORING and WATSON, but WILLIS and CLARK can not compensate for RICHARDS and HOLDERNESS. CLARK is the doubtful man alluded to, and unless he speedily improves his style and acquires the family of using his powerful and handsome shoulders in the bow Harvard form his place will be forfeited. On the whole the present prospect is that the race of 1869 will possess an element of which the races of the past two years have been wholly destitute, and that the magenta and the blue will not be far apart when the crews come in sight of Regatta Point on the homestretch.

Gossip From Washington.

Washington telegrams to the Boston Journal give the following:

"President GRANT said on Monday to a personal friend that he had read the able speech of Mr. SUMNER on the depredations committed by anglo-rebel armed ships, three times, and that he now saw the question in its true light. Instead of regarding it as a mere bill of damages for the depredations committed by the Alabama and other piratical vessels, some of the President's Cabinet are understood to regard Mr. SUMNER's speech as a declaration that there can be no further negotiations until Great Britain admits that she acted badly; and consequently they express the wish that the speech had been made, or rather that it had not been published. Whether this be true or not, it is evident that Mr. SUMNER's original and forcible statements of what constitute ocean belligerency are indorsed almost unanimously by the American people.

Mr. Mathew Marvin, from Ohio, was at the White House on Monday, having in his possession the sword carried by the Confederate General JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, prior to the capture of Selma, Ala. The sword is encased in a handsome steel scabbard, with gold bands, and bears on the side a gold plate with this inscription: 'From FRYLEY'S and HAYNE' brigades to General J. C. BRECKINRIDGE, as a mark of esteem and admiration for their much loved commander.' The weapon was captured by the son of the lady having it in possession, a member of the Fourth Ohio Cavalry, which made a raid on Selma and captured the sword in the house where BRECKINRIDGE was stopping. BRECKINRIDGE escaped from the back door, leaving his sword upon the table.

It is rumored at the capital that the House Committee on enrolled bills has applied to the Navy Department for the use of a first-class iron-clad on which to visit Europe, and to officially observe how bills are enrolled there. It is further rumored that they also desire to have the full Marine Band detailed for the excursion, and to secure the services of Mr. DOWNING, the Congressional caterer. Such an excursion would be less expensive, and more useful, than the proposed journeyings of other committees."

THE CANAAN CHILD-MURDER.

Trial of Josephine Brown for the Murder of Her Adopted Daughter—Second Day's Proceedings.

From Our Own Reporter.

HUDSON, Tuesday, April 20, 1869.

At 10 o'clock this morning the Court was opened, and the prisoner brought before it, when Sheriff OVERBECKER made his return of the twenty men impaneled yesterday. At 10:30 the last juryman was obtained, when District-Attorney LANGLEY opened the case on behalf of the people. He alluded, in the first place, to the unpleasant duty devolved upon him, and then to his own weakness, and implored for himself and the jury that Divine guidance which should cause the ends of justice to be attained. He then briefly, but eloquently and clearly, set forth the crime with which the prisoner stands charged, namely: "That JOSEPHINE BROWN was not indicted for murder, but for being an accessory before the fact." He then described the character and commented on the and death of ANGIE STEWART, from Dayton, Ohio—the circumstances of the insurance on her life, the removing to Canaan, the death of the child, the trial of BROWN, his conviction, sentence and death. These facts were narrated in a clear and explicit manner, and in support of their truthfulness the District-Attorney stated what evidence he would introduce. As I have said, the story was told in a clear and explicit manner, and with a force and dignity which made a deep impression on the minds of the jury, as was clearly to be seen from the interest they took in his statements. He highly complimented RONMEY E. LOMBERNE, Esq., Mr. BROWN's counsel, on his ability, and in conclusion besought that the jury would act justly and bring in such a verdict as would meet the ends of justice and right.

The examination of witnesses was then proceeded with, the mother of the murdered child being first called.

Mary Ann Stewart—Reside at Dayton, Ohio; was 14 last November; knew the prisoner as Josephine Barney; had lived at Dayton twenty-five years; have seen Josephine Barney there last January or February; got acquainted with her at Benny Barney's house, Joseph Brown's brother; am the mother of Angeline Stewart; Angie was 11 years, 6 months and 4 days old; I stated in our former report that I did not reside with them, but Mr. Stewart removed into Brown's house and took them to board, as the Browns had no household furniture; Mrs. Brown frequently talked of visiting Connecticut; when they got money from the city was going to see her mother at Hartford; she also said she was to have $5,000 in case she died; she did not say where she was to get it from, but intimated that she was to get it from her mother, who kept a dairy and forty cows, and she wondered how many cows her mother would have; Angie was lively; I saw her when she went out riding one day with the Browns, and went with them to Mrs. Coburn's, where they made arrangements to take a child of Mrs. Coburn; the child was to be legally adopted; I did not know exactly they would adopt it; she made some objection on account of drawing a pension for the child, but Brown stated that he would adopt it instead; Mrs. Brown went to Coburn's next morning, and on her return said that Mrs. Coburn had agreed to let them have the child; about noon on the 4th of the October following Mrs. Brown with money they had given them, saying that her sister was sick and her mother would not let her go; Brown said: "I don't care a damn—if I can't get Angie I can take another;" I had seen her sister three weeks before, and the Browns petted him, but kept him only one afternoon; after Brown made his remark, Angie wanted to go with them; I did not know what he did, but Mr. and Mrs. Brown kept saying: "Mother let her go;" they always called me mother; Mrs. Brown said she would dress Angie up so Cleveland would not know her; Brown kissed her and said: "Mother let her go, I will be back in three weeks, and if Angie gets homesick in that time I will bring her home with me, and if Mr. Decker comes down I will take her back;" Angie was to come next Saturday; this was said Wednesday; he further said, "I will come here and board with you and if Angie is homesick I will bring her with me; if not, she can stay with her mother;" Brown commenced to Angie going; Mr. Brown said to the other girl, "Angie will see more in one month than you will ever in all your lifetime;" Angie was ready and the Browns got ready; packing up goods—very little; Angie had preserved fruit and other things; Mrs. Brown said she was going to sew at her mother's; things were shipped to the Union depot; I did not know that they also left the same night; at supper Mr. Brown wrote a note for her, and then said, "Mother, I will write to you to-morrow, and will write every day, telling where we are, as Angie is homesick;" I did not know of their doing, and how she liked it; they left Dayton about 8 or 9 o'clock, on the broad-gauge road to Cleveland; Mrs. Brown said she wanted to take a little child away, because she was lonesome alone; she was not able to be insulted, and if she had a little girl with her, men would think her a married woman; Mrs. Brown was to go from Hartford to New-York alone, Brown only going as far as Hartford; Angie was small of her age, sandy complexion, and reddish hair and blue eyes; never have seen Angie since, except in a vision and a dream, and then she always was crying.

Owen Stewart—Abathout 1st of January or February, she first met the Browns, while washing at her brother's house; they were keeping house up stairs; they were acquainted for two weeks afterward; have done work for Mrs. Brown; Raymond Barney was a painter; Raymond and Joseph worked together; don't think they ever boarded at Mrs. Brown's; Joseph lived with her, Raymond and Joseph did not work together; Brown was introduced to her as Barney; she distinctly remembers it; don't know as she said this was Joseph and Raymond's brother; Joseph and Raymond were half-brothers; Joseph carried on business; conducted himself properly; Mrs. Brown was rough in her conversation; Joseph on the contrary; nothing regarded as really bad; they left Dayton on Sept. 17; had been with her since the 6th of August; was a witness on trial of Joseph Brown; did not see anything out of the way with him; saw him every day; did not see anything out of the way with him; saw him that once; always called her mother because it was handy; called them Mr. and Mrs. Barney; never heard any thing about Angie; did not know anything about a sign of Raymond Barney; there were four or five men under Joseph; Mrs. Barney was very talkative; rattled off a good deal; Joseph had no large jobs; after coming to Dayton with me; Mrs. Brown spoke frequently of the $5,000—in fact, almost continually; she said she expected it through her husband; I do not recollect in figures. It is one time her father was independently rich; did not say it was to come there, but that she was to have it in going East; nothing was said about adopting Angie, although they were talking about adopting a child; Joseph had seen Mrs. Coburn while he was painting the Odd Fellows' Hall; Mrs. Coburn's husband has lost his leg by; Joseph was to board with her until Josephine came back; I assisted in getting Mrs. Brown ready; did not see all the contents of the trunk; Mrs. Brown said she was going to Cleveland; did not say what the was going to do with the money when she got it.

Other evidence was given, which, however, did not reveal any new facts in addition to those sworn to on the trial of Joseph Brown.

This afternoon, and in fact all day, Mrs. BROWN has been the observed of all observers. She was attired in a neat calico gown, with white collar and blue ribbon as a neck-tie, and wore a chignon. She sat apart from all others inside the bar, and at times seemed to be in a very pensive mood. At 4 o'clock P. M. she was handed the afternoon paper, which she perused with much interest. She is about 35 years of age, stoutly built, oval face, short thick neck, plump hands, and at times one can see her dull eyes sparkle as some technical point is raised by her counsel. All this afternoon the seats set apart for ladies in the court-room have been nearly filled, the most of the occupants being giddy, thoughtless girls, who now and then smoker at Nothing and gape upon the scene before them as though it was a public entertainment, instead of a trial for the life or death of one of their sex.

The Rising of the St. Lawrence.

From the Montreal Witness, April 19.

The long apprehended floes is upon us at last. Since Saturday night the river has risen so high as entirely to cover Commissioners-street, flooding the warehouse basements thereon, also the cellars of the Royal Insurance building. In St. Paul-street, near McGill, the water is about a foot deep, at the time we write; but, as is usual on these occasions, it continues to fluctuate. The first intimation given of the rise, was on Saturday night about 12 o'clock, when a great commotion was observed among the ice opposite the city. This was caused by large quantities of ice having broken loose from above the bridge—where there was a clear space of considerable extent—and floated down against the masses which blocked up the channel opposite the city. The water continued to swell gradually during yesterday till 5 o'clock, when there was a temporary subsidence of a few inches. During last night it again began to rise, and has continued to do so at the rate of four or five inches an hour. Yesterday the people inhabiting the low-lying portions of Griffintown were busily engaged in clearing their cellars and lower floors of goods, which they removed to the second flat. At 5 o'clock this morning the only portions of Griffintown covered with water were those between lower St. Joseph and Bonaventure streets, and likewise some portions of Wellington and William streets. In King-street, and we believe also in some other streets, the pressure of the flood in the sewers has forced up the water. In the lower ward of the river has come somewhat suddenly at last, and the water is now at about the first level of the bridge, which is 14 feet lower than the height to which it attained in 1865, and some two feet lower than in 1861. The surface of the river presents a wild and rugged aspect from the "shoves," which have thrown it up in different directions; and we await with anxiety to see if it shall be piled yet higher, or by gorging vent below, the ice held move off, and in few days leave the navigation open.

DISASTER ON THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

The Burning of the Steamer G. A. Thomson—Twenty-one Lives Supposed to be Lost—Reported Scandalous Conduct of the Captain—Mutiny of the Carpenter.

From the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, April 13.

The report of the burning of the steamer G. A. Thomson, announced in Sunday's issue, and the terrible loss of life attendant upon it, was fully confirmed, yesterday, by passengers who were on her at the time of the disaster. Mr. DAVID ALLEN, who has been residing near Louisville, Ky., with his wife and child, had taken passage on the boat for Ozark, Ark., and from him we get the following statement:

The boat struck a snag just below Irwin's Landing, at 2 o'clock Saturday morning; he was in the ladies' cabin at the time, and came to the front of the boat, where the captain was standing, who seemed to be quite cool and said there was no danger; and could get out without any loss. Just at that time the carpenter ascended the stairs from the deck of the steamer, and told the captain the boat was on fire, but the latter did not heed the remark, until the carpenter had a second time brought the news, and then took the captain below to show him that it was so. The captain then had two yawls launched, and ordered the women and children to be placed in them. The captain, his wife, Mr. ALLEN's wife and child, the captain's dog, his servant, and one or two others, got off in them, the captain promising to return for the others, but after getting about 20 yards from the steamer, she was enveloped in flames, and the only chance for safety left for those on board the burning steamer was to jump overboard. About that time the carpenter got another skiff and took out the balance of the women and children. It being dark, it was hard to tell which shore was the nearest, and some landed on either side. One man was saved on a hogshead of tobacco, some on doors and planks. Anything that could be picked up was used. Mr. ALLEN but on a life-preserver, and swam ashore, landing about three-fourths of a mile from the wreck, on the opposite side from his wife. Next morning those who had landed on the same shore were set across the river. All of his effects, save what himself, wife and child had on at the time, were lost. According to his estimate and that of other passengers, twenty-one persons were lost, including both the clerks, George ALLEN, of Cincinnati, also JOHN PRESTON, the deck-sweeper, one of the cooks, one waiter, one passenger from Pine Bluff, named WILSON, and the chambermaid, MARY FIELD, (colored,) of Cincinnati, and nine colored deck hands. The chambermaid was the only woman lost. No children were lost, and all three of the pilots saved. The Captain and crew returned on the Thos. H. Allen. The Captain said the first-clerk had all the money.

Mr. ALLEN gives much praise to the carpenter. He says but for him not a woman or child would have been saved. He could not learn his name. The largest life boat was not cut down and used, but allowed to hang to the spars. There was no effort whatever on the part of the Captain to save anybody. The last he saw of the chambermaid she was on the deck crying for help. Did not know whether she was drowned or burned to death. The boat was loaded with an assortment of general merchandise, pork, whisky, drygoods, furniture, stoneware, farming utensils, &c. There was no lime in the hold, as stated in our former report. A number of barrels were on deck, and the fire originated among them. The boat was heavily loaded. Mr. ALLEN relates it as a remarkable fact that the Captain, mate, carpenter and two pilots were all together in the pilot-house at the late hour of the occurrence. The wife of the Captain remarked to his wife, afterward, that they were expecting the boat would be sunk. He saw but one trunk and valise that were saved—they were supposed to belong to the Captain's wife. Mr. ALLEN also gives another passenger referred to in the above statement.

Captain JAMES BURGE, who resides at Red Fork, on the Arkansas River, reports that he knows of but seventeen persons being lost. The boat was not in the regular channel at the time the accident occurred. He agrees in most of the statements made by Mr. ALLEN. The first yawls carried out the ladies and children and the captain. The second was entered by the two clerks, Mr. JACOB TRUNDLE, Mr. D. J. DESMOINE, and one or two others, but it was upset by the deck hands in their efforts to get in, and all save Mr. DESMOINES and the carpenter found watery graves. The captain requested the passengers to go below and throw the line overboard, and that they remain on the front of the boat, and he would take care of the women and children and send back for the balance, but the flames spread so rapidly he was prevented from doing so. Captain BURGE remained on the boat with young TRUNDLE, who was unable to swim, until the boat was enveloped in a column of fire, and then swam safely ashore in the yawl which was capsized by the deck hands. He then swam ashore, landing about three-fourths of a mile from the wreck.

Mr. F. B. WILCOX, another passenger, states that the boat was not only out of the regular channel, but she was running with 130 pounds of steam. He concurs in the statement above.

The boat was about 130 yards from shore when the accident occurred. The water was about nine feet deep. She had on board about $100,000 worth of merchandise, mostly for our business men and Fort Sumter merchants, which was generally insured. The boat was quite an old craft, and was fully insured. Mr. TURNELL, who resides at New York, is among the missing.

REFORM LEAGUE.

Organization of a Reform League in Boston—The Necessity of Reciprocal Free Trade—Prominent Men in Council—Their Platform.

BOSTON, Tuesday, April 20, 1869.

The meeting at Chickering Hall to-night, to organize a Reform League, was largely attended, there being present many persons distinguished in commercial circles and in statesmanship. The meeting was called to order by Mr. JAMES A. DUPEE. He congratulated those present on the fact that the meeting comprised representatives of every shade of party politics, which augured well for the future of the Reform. He announced the object of the meeting as follows:

The doctrines to be advocated this evening would find fitting responses from all parts of the country. While heartily indorsing all the views set forth in the call, he would confine himself to commenting upon one point, viz: On the necessity of reciprocal free trade with all the States of the North American continent. The abrogation of the treaty of reciprocity with British North America has been productive of losses, of which the man can state the extent in figures. It is for the Reform League to endeavor to reëstablish those relations of commercial friendship with our Canadian neighbors which proved of such mutual benefit. Nor will the League probably stop with the advocacy of treaties of reciprocity with the North American States. We shall ere long be laboring for reciprocal treaties with all the States of our continent, from Hudson's Bay to the Straits of Magellan, so that the manufactures of Lowell may be exchanged for the copper ores of the Andes, and Yankee notions for the wool and hides of South America. He hoped that the sons and successors of the Slaters, the Appletons and the Lawrences, the owners of cotton manufactories, with the forecast of their fathers, would adapt themselves to the new conditions of foreign and domestic trade, would build new Manchesters and new Holyokes. Then shall the products of labor-saving machinery, controlled by American brains, as against the products of the Old World, be exchanged for the raw materials of this Continent. Then shall our shipyards resound once more with the merry music of the graver and caulker; our ports welcome the flags of all nations, and this country become truly the mistress of the sea. The prospect at present was not encouraging; but he had faith in the American people, and felt sure a change to the better would soon come.

The following preamble and resolutions were then presented:

Whereas, We believe the following propositions to be true:

1. That every man is entitled to the results of his own labor, and to exchange the same at pleasure, wherever he can do so to the best advantage.

That all interference of government by which he is made to receive for his exchange a less quantity of the objects of his desire than he might otherwise obtain, is an infringement of natural rights, to be justified only by a clear public necessity.

That as individuals have aptitudes for different occupations, by which each is enabled to excel in his own special line, and thereby the joint product of all is greatly increased, while by exchange each person can obtain vastly more of the comforts of life than if compelled by law to forego the advantages of such a division of labor. It is no less true that nations can work to the best advantage in pursuing such branches of industry as natural facilities and natural tastes indicate as profitable, and can by mutual exchange give to each nation the greatest results from the least expenditure of toil.

That the phrase "we cannot compete with other nations" in the production of a given article, means simply that we could be no longer producing some other thing, that the required investment of labor and capital will not pay in the one case, because there is some other employment for them which offers better returns.

That the efforts to change, by legislation, the current of industrial activity from such employments as prove most profitable to others less profitable, is, to a nation, into such as promise to be more profitable, but for such legislative interference, or, in other words, to induce the expenditure of two dollars' worth of labor to produce one dollar's worth of value, involves an enormous waste of industrial power, which may be saved to society by allowing free play to natural forces, prompting each community to embarkation that which promises to be best.

That the common interests of society demanding from Government the maintenance of order, the administration of justice, the opportunity for education and various other purposes for the common good, it is necessary to provide for the expense of such objects by a just and equal system of taxation.

That in raising revenue by indirect taxation, Government may properly levy customs duties under the power to raise taxes, but such duties should be laid for the purpose of gathering revenue and not for the purpose of shutting out the products of other lands. That when duties are imposed, as they must be, to raise revenue, such power cannot be in justice, and should not be exercised so as to compel the community to pay high rates for manufactures, from which the public treasury gains no benefit, while the extra price goes to the profit of a few persons, or, more probably, is used by the others to produce something which could be more advantageously obtained by an exchange of products with some other nation.

That not two persons can exist without mutually giving each other to be for the advantage, evil or what is a good and profitable transaction. Even an individual cannot do a bad one if multiplied a million fold between two nations.

That the true policy of government is to seek to aid the manufacturing industry by enabling it to produce goods cheaply, so as to be able to meet competition, and supply foreign markets, rather than by enabling it to compete in price to make goods profitable. To this end, raw materials, machinery, fuel and lumber should be exempted from duty; and, more important than all else, a currency of real value should take the place of depreciated paper money.

That experience has shown that protective duties are inadmissible in permanently excluding foreign goods, as the investment of the protected article must in turn obtain higher prices for each of its products, leading to a higher range of prices for all commodities and again tempting to increased imports.

That the only rational mode of reducing importations to a healthy and permanent level is to reduce the volume of the currency, and, by reducing prices, to make excessive importations impracticable.

That while a proper regard for existing interests requires that a change in the tariff should be avoided, and that all steps in return to an equitable and permanent system should be carefully made, it is important that the tariff should be simplified, and such changes made in many of the present exorbitant rates of duty as the demands of the revenue and the interests of consumers require.

That the commercial interests of the United States with all the countries of the American continent are capable of vast expansion, and, as treaties of reciprocity will promote the common interests of mutually advantageous trade with these countries, such treaties should receive the early attention of the Government.

That the present course of depressing the price of gold by the export of bonds and other forms of indebtedness, certain to continue so long as we make foreign dollars of our money worth no more than three dollars of the money of the world, stimulates importations far beyond the proper requirements of the country if compelled to pay cash, by the export of gold, and can only end in disaster.

That the there can be no sound condition of business affairs in this country while all values are measured by a constantly fluctuating standard, the immediate duty of the Government should be the adoption of such measures as will restore the currency of the country to the specie standard.

That the system of appointment to office, as the reward of party labors, tends to the corruption of the public service, and to the demoralization of the politics of the country. Therefore it shall be one of the objects of this league to promote reform in the civil service, and the appointment of all Government officers upon the sole ground of their ability to discharge the duties of their respective offices. Therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby form ourselves into an association, to be known as the "Reform League," under the following by-laws:

1. The officers of the League shall consist of a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Treasurer, a Corresponding Secretary, Recording Secretary, and twelve Directors.

2. These officers shall perform the duties usually pertaining to their respective offices, and together shall form an Executive Committee.

3. Any person may become a member upon the payment of one dollar, and will thereafter, by payment of one dollar annually, remain a member of the League.

4. There shall be an advisory council, consisting of such distinguished persons to be elected at the first meeting of the League, and such other persons as may from time to time, be added by the Executive Committee; the Chairman of said council shall be ex officio a member of the Executive Committee.

5. The annual meeting shall be held in March, in each year, for the choice of officers, but the Executive Committee may fill any vacancy which may occur in any office during the year. The Executive Committee may, from time to time, be called by order of the Committee, and shall be called upon the written request of twenty members.

6. No officer or member of the League shall be permitted to make any agreement for the payment of any money, or incur any liability beyond cash on hand.

Addresses were made by EDWARD ATKINSON, JOHN W. CHANDLER, WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, NATHANIEL C. NASH and others, after which the above resolutions were adopted.

Ex-Governor Parsons of Alabama—His Advice to His Fellow-Citizens.

Ex-Governor PARSONS, of Alabama, addressed the people of Talladega on Wednesday, 7th inst., giving his views as to national and State politics. In the remarks of his speech he said:

"I will not undertake on this occasion to enumerate all we can do, but I respectfully offer for your consideration the following suggestions:

1. Nothing good will result from abusing Mr. BULLOCK and his friends, nor President GRANT and the Republican Party.

2. We must regard the existing Government in our State as the Government of Alabama, and as such give it all the support in our power, thereby rendering it efficient in the maintenance of law and order. In this way we shall secure the blessings of 'peace and prosperity.'

3. We must permit every citizen to speak his sentiments freely and without molestation, and, if necessary, protect him in so doing, so long as he does not violate the peace and good order of society. If we do not approve his sentiments we can peacably retire and let him speak in peace to those who do.

4. We must enforce the laws which now exist and always have existed in this State, at least so long as they remain on the penal code, against carrying concealed weapons. The practice of going armed is too often the sole cause of deadly violence.

5. We must, each and all, habitually act in obedience to law, because it is the law, and minister kindly and firmly on all around us, both by precept and example.

6. We must look alone to the ballot-box and the legislative power to change bad laws—not to violence."

Hon. George H. Pendleton and Reconstruction.

From the Columbus Enquirer, April 19.

The St. Louis Republican makes an editorial commentary upon the alleged fact that Hon. GEORGE H. PENDLETON, in connection with prominent Democrats of New-York, had advised the people of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas to have nothing to do with the proposed plan of reconstruction as proposed in the recent enactment of Congress." The fact being erroneous, of course the commentary falls to the ground. Mr. PENDLETON has tendered the States in question no advice. He believes they are the best judges of their own interests, and nothing would induce him to be in antagonism to them, or to offer advice to influence their decision.

The Pittsburg Oil Fire Subdued.

From the Pittsburg Gazette, April 20.

The extensive and destructive conflagration at FORSYTHE's oil works has at length subsided, and there appears to be no further apprehension of danger. The loss of property, although not definitely ascertained, is estimated at $200,000, and the insurance $64,000, making a loss over the insurance of $136,000. The fire has been extinguished at a point where it began at the tank of distillate oil, containing 3,000 barrels, which was one of the first to take fire. There is a considerable quantity of oil remaining in it, and the fire will continue until it is all consumed.

Westward and Southern Emigration—The Excelsior, Eureka and Manhattan Colonies.

The first batch of the Excelsior colonists, whose departure was announced in the TIMES of Wednesday, the 14th, has arrived safely at Atchison, where it now is awaiting the selection of a suitable location. Since its departure many families have left to join it, and many others have become members of the Society in this City. This first division arrived at its destination, Atchison, Saturday evening, twelve hours later than it should have done, owing to a breakdown on the road; a baggage car having discommoded. The colonists are in good spirits, and send cheering reports to their friends. Since Tuesday many families have started West, and continue to do so daily. The second division will leave May 2; it will comprise fifty families. The members of this colony meet at No. 66 East Broadway every Saturday evening.

The Eureka Company have already sent southward to Virginia some twenty-five families, Irish and German. They went by the Old Dominion line of steamers. With them went seventy families of the Manhattan Colonizing Club, both bound for Spottsylvania. These two Companies have among their members some of the best American and German mechanics, having money, and desirous of a new field of action promising houses and competence for them and their children. The Manhattan has in its treasury to-day $7,000, showing an increase of $2,000 in one week. These Companies purchase their lands in the most desirable localities Hence, said invite all unencumbered male men to join in the resettlement of these fertile lands, which need only cultivation to render them remunerative. Both Companies meet daily at the Whitlock Exposition Rooms, No. 37 Park-place.

Base Ball.

Yesterday the Mutual Club opened play at their grounds in Brooklyn, and the Gothams at the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, and both Clubs had interesting games. On Monday the veteran Knickerbockers, composed of some of our esteemed merchants and citizens, visited their old grounds at Hoboken, and opened their social practice games for the season with considerable éclat, quite a numerous party being present, among whom were the genial Slate, the festive Davis, and Messrs. Hillsdale, Taylor, Purdy, Cheesman, Bleecn, Rochester, McDonald, &c. After a game of six innings, in which TAYLOR's party scored 24 to BLEECH's 18, the day's play terminated.

Rev. Dr. Hall on "Hands."

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The season for country sales was fairly opened yesterday by Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., who disposed of 150 lots at Plainfield, N. J. The day was particularly favorable—clear, bright and warm, and of the kind when the green fields seem most healthful and inviting. The special train was well filled, and with a very respectable class of persons. Unfortunately the special followed a way train, and considerable valuable time was consequently wasted on the road. Arriving at the grounds, located some two miles from the depot, the visitors found a nice lunch prepared, to which they did full justice. After they had partaken of the fluids and solids and were thereby brought up to a proper buying humor, they, preceded by the venerable but always jubilant auctioneer, proceeded to the place of sale. The bidding commenced quite briskly, and the first lots offered were promptly knocked down at $175 each. The next four lots sold at $130 each. The others sold at $100, $60, $65, and the last as low as $32 50 each. Before commencing the sale, Mr. BLEECKER announced that it was positive and unreserved; the lots were to be sold to the highest bidder, no matter at what price. Some wag, thinking to create a little amusement, or perhaps to test the statement, offered a bid of $25; but he was promptly and good-humoredly answered, and had the laugh turned against him badly. The best of feeling existed between the auctioneer and his audience, and the sale must be regarded as a very satisfactory one.

At the salesroom the attendance was quite large and the bidding good. A large variety of improved and unimproved Brooklyn property, also several pieces of unimproved Westchester County property were very satisfactorily disposed of.

The sales for to-day are as follows:

Messrs. MULLER, WILKINS & CO. will sell, by order of the heirs of ROBERT LATOU, deceased, sixty-seven valuable lots near the Riverside Drive and Park, and on First, Fourth and Eleventh avenues, Forty-sixth, Fifty-fourth and Fifty-sixth streets; also, by order of JOHN LISK, receiver, a lease for seven years of the four-story brown-stone-front dwelling on the northeast corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-sixth-street.

Messrs. E. H. LUDLOW & Co. have a peremptory sale, by order of the Supreme Court, under the direction of JOHN N. WHITING, referee, of the following-described property: The three-story brick house and lot No. 8 East Tenth-street, east of Fifth-avenue; the extra large warehouse Nos. 174 and 176 Pearl-street, east side, near Pine-street; the first-class four-story high-stoop marble-front house and lot No. 237 West Twenty-third-street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues. Also, by order of the executors of GEORGE UNDERHILL, deceased, the first-class four-story basement and sub-cellar brown-stone high-stoop house and lot No. 135 East Thirty-fifth-street, between Park and Lexington avenues.

Messrs. BLEECKER, SON & CO. will sell the four-story high-stoop brown-stone house and lot, No. 331 Lexington-avenue, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth streets.

Mr. JOSEPH MCGUIRE will sell, by order of the Supreme Court, under direction of DANIEL P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee, the six lots on the northerly side of Sixty-fourth-street, commencing 100 feet east of Eleventh-avenue. Also, two lots on the south side of Sixty-fifth-street, commencing 100 feet west of Eleventh-avenue, and four lots on the south side of Sixty-eighth-street, commencing 100 feet west of Eleventh-avenue.

On Thursday Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO. will sell on the ground one hundred villa plots, located at Cranford, N. J. The property is on the line of the Central Railroad, but 49 minutes from New-York, is immediately opposite the station, and in the midst of improvements. They will, at the same time and place, sell a dwelling-house, barn and carriage-house and grounds, comprising two acres. A special train will leave New-York at 11 o'clock A. M. Maps and passes may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 26 Pine-street.

ALBANY.

The City Tax Levy—Jay Gould's Bill—The Gas Bill—Contested Seats—Southern Vote, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 20, 1869.

The City tax levy came up as the special order in the Senate Committee of the Whole this morning, and occupied the entire session. The first motion made was by Senator CREAMER to increase the appropriation for public drinking hydrants and urinals from $4,800 to $25,000. The motion was discussed at length, and after an amendment fixing the sum at $10,000, was passed. Senator PARKER took occasion during the discussion to call the attention of the Senate to the remark made by Senator MURPHY when the veto message of the Governor was under consideration the other day, that "the Republican Party, having a majority in both Houses, would be responsible for the legislation here this Winter." Those Senators who had announced their intention to "act independently" (referring to a remark made by Senator WILLIAMS) on this tax levy, would do well to bear in mind the hint from the Senator from the Third.

The item appropriating $69,166 75 for repaving Broadway, in addition to the $200,000 already paid the contractor, was stricken out after a good deal of discussion, on motion of Senator HOWSON. No other amendments were made to the bill as reported from the Committee. Mr. MORRIS moved to amend the first section so as to leave all the items of the tax levy to be fixed by the Mayor and Supervisors. Mr. PARKER moved to amend by leaving it to the Mayor, Comptroller, Chamberlain, President of the Croton Board, and the Presidents of all the New-York Commissions, with the exception of Police. Both amendments were pending when the Committee rose and ordered the bill to a third reading.

Great credit is due to Mr. CROWLEY, the Chairman of the Committee on Municipal Affairs, for the pains he has taken to inform himself thoroughly upon each item of the tax levy, and the uncompromising zeal he has displayed in protecting the taxpayers of New-York against the swindles that are so often smuggled into the bill.

ANOTHER VETO.

The Governor to-day sent in a veto of the Avenue C Horse Railroad, placing his objections on similar ground to that of the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth-street Road. The veto was laid on the table among the others, which now amount to a baker's dozen.

JAY GOULD'S BILL.

The bill introduced by Senator TWEED, and backed by JAY GOULD, (published in Saturday's TIMES,) regulating the election of railroad directors, and prohibiting any stockholder or director of either of the leading roads from being a director in any other, came up for a third reading in the Assembly this morning, having already passed the Senate. Mr. KIERNAN made an able speech against the bill, saying that while he had the highest respect for the Senator who introduced it, he would be compelled to oppose it, even at the sacrifice, if necessary, of his political prospects. Mr. LA BAU followed in opposition to the bill, and characterized it as part and parcel of the corrupt legislation which was put through here last Winter by wholesale debauchery of the Legislature. He said that the bill proposed to continue in office, by legislative enactment, a body of directors of one of the leading railroads of the State, who had shown themselves regardless of the interests of its stockholders or of the people.

Mr. SELKREG advocated the bill, for the reason that it prevented a consolidation of these wealthy railroad companies, and was, therefore, in his opinion, in the interest of the public. He said that never since the opening of the Erie Railroad had the road been so well managed and the public convenience so well cared for as since Jay GOULD became managing director.

Mr. HITCHMAN and Mr. BERGEN also advocated the bill, and Mr. N. E. SMITH opposed it.

Mr. LA BAU closed the discussion by moving that the bill be laid upon the table. He said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The gentleman from New-York (Mr. HITCHMAN) attempts an acrobatic feat here, which is to ride two horses, and I think between the two he is in manifest danger of being split in the middle. He talks of glittering generalities. He talks of monopoly. This is the greatest of all monopolies. "Monopolies" is the dust he would throw in your eyes, while he is traveling off to fasten the monopoly upon the people of the State. He talks about one man. He is manifest to him I will speak by-and-by. If you pass this law you take the power and authority from the stockholders to govern and control the direction of that road. I do not care where it leads! I am man enough to do my duty here. I am here to represent Warren County, and to Warren County I am responsible for my acts I do here. He then says, in answer to the gentleman from New-York, (Mr. KIERNAN,) Whether he did not vote for the Consolidation Bill the other day, that he did so vote, because those roads were consolidated in fact, though not in law. But, that is the shadow of an excuse for now doing by law what cannot be done otherwise. How are they consolidated? Simply because controlled by one man! Is there any of the attributes of a legal consolidation in that? Who is CORNELIUS VANDERBILT? A man tottering on the very verge of the grave—seventy-five years of age; and, inasmuch as an attack has been made upon him, I deem it my duty to stand here and resent it. I do not travel in the direction of railroad monopolies. I have not cast a vote to fasten one upon the people of this State. One of these companies had a capital of $23,000,000. You propose to issue certificates to the amount of 50 per cent. of the entire amount of that capital! What is the result? It is to increase the debt. And, there is my objection. And I have not found the man yet who can unseat me in my convictions. Now, sir, the 50 per cent. may be legal and justifiable, and entirely proper, yet two years hence they may not do the same thing. And I say, when any railroad company must travel out of the limits of law to come to the Legislature to legalize it—I say it is demoralizing, and I for one am opposed to it. Now, sir, let Mr. HITCHMAN says, and the gentleman from Tompkins (Mr. SELKREG) has the same monomania (and I am surprised to find it,) he says this is to keep Mr. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT from getting control of this road. In the first place, does he want it? He does not own a dollar of the stock to my certain knowledge, nor don't want it! He does own it to the extent of many millions of dollars, and there he proposes to rest, because he has no confidence in this direction (and in his old age he wants to be considered secure,) and no desire to be injured by men who in a day convert twenty million of bonds into stock. What is the result? The stockholders of that road, capitalists, widows and orphans have suffered terribly by the unlawful, base and damnable transactions of this Erie direction. Wall-street has got beyond the reach of any one man or any one corporation. Their tactics have been to meet in secret conclave and agree to issue test millions of bonds. They run up the price and unload their millions, and run it down twenty cents on a dollar, and your margin is wiped out and you are sold out. These interests combine against your canal interest, which is threatened to-day. When you talk about CORNELIUS VANDERBILT fighting this bill, you are mistaken. It is in his interest. I do not fight the bill here in the interest of him or any corporation. I am an individual here, and as an individual I assert my right. Now, sir, the law that the gentleman from TOMPKINS talks about already prevails in the act of 1865, and I would like him to tell me by what ingenuity can CORNELIUS VANDERBILT either with or without the act get this control of that road.

The motion to lay on the table was carried—yeas 68, nays 47.

THE GAS BILL.

An effort is being made to kill the bill to protect the public against gas monopolies by staving off action upon it until it is too late. A notorious Albany lobbyist visited the gas companies in New-York last week, and it can readily be inferred what influences will be brought to bear to prevent the passage of the bill. Let the people watch the action of their representatives upon this measure.

CONTESTED SEATS.

The case of HAWKINS against PECKER for the Richmond County seat was to have been up again for final decision this morning, but was prevented off by the joint rule on third readings. It will be up the first thing to-morrow morning, when, if the Republicans are true to their party, HAWKINS will get the seat. The Committee on Privileges and Elections are ready to report on the case of MCLEOD vs. HALPINE, Third District of New-York, and will give the seat to MCLEOD. The fraudulent perpetrated by the Democracy in this district surpass anything developed by the Congressional Committee.

The Assembly is hereafter to hold three sessions a day, and it looks as though they might adjourn by the 1st of May.

Favorable Report on the Police Bill.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 20.

In the Assembly, this evening, the bill increasing the Police force to 2,400 in New-York and one in Brooklyn, was favorably reported. The old statutory provision in regard to the Metropolitan Police District, was stricken out, and the bill was amended so as to include Brooklyn, and then went to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. HITCHMAN moved to amend by inserting the name of Mr. Commissioner Smith, who spoke strongly against the bill, and was followed by Mr. HITCHMAN in favor of the bill. The Democrats generally voted adversely on the bill increasing the pay of Police Commissioners.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE....ALBANY, Tuesday, April 20.

The Senate in the Committee of the Whole went to the special order—the New-York City TAX LEVY.

The amendment to the tax levy appropriating $10,000 for the erection of public drinking hydrants and urinals, such sum to come from the Excise funds and disbursed by the Board of Health, was adopted. Also, $125,000 for the completion of the Infants' Hospital at Randall's Island.

The appropriation for repaving Broadway ($69,000) was stricken out.

Mr. PARKER offered an amendment that hereafter all taxes in the City and County of New-York be authorized exclusively by a Board consisting of the Mayor, Comptroller, Chamberlain of New-York, Presidents of the various Metropolitan Commissions, Croton Aqueduct Board, Commissioners of the Central Park, Charities and Corrections, and the Board of Education, any person assessed may be heard before said Boards.

Pending the discussion the Committee arose and reported progress. On motion of Mr. CROWLEY the bill was then ordered to a third reading.

A message was received from the Governor vetoing the bill for the extension of Avenue C Railroad, the ground thereof being that the said authorized road has not yet commenced building, and that no compensation is allowed to the City. Tabled.

Removal of the National Bank-Note Company's Offices.

The National Bank-note Company of this City are removing their offices to Cooper Institute. The fifth and sixth stories of the Institute have been leased for twenty years by the Company, and a boiler and coal vault thirty feet below the curb are being excavated at the south end of the building. The engine of the Company is to be on the fifth story, and the presses on the sixth. In one week the entire material will have been removed to the new offices, under the superintendence of Mr. S. H. DARFORTH.

An elevator is also being made, by which material, and even the employes of the Company may be hoisted up to the proper room, or lowered to the ground floor. This elevator will be always kept in motion by steam, raising or lowering burdens.

The new offices of the Bank-note Company will be more convenient than the old ones; and the Company will be enabled to execute a larger amount of printing than they do at present. The boiler and coal vaults are fast approaching completion under the direction of Mr. W. S. KNIGHT, mason.

The reported rent to be paid by the Company for the new offices is $20,000 per annum.

The Spiritual Photograph Case—A Letter to Justice Dowling.

Considerable interest is manifested by the believers in spiritualism in the developments to be made in the case of MUMLER, the pretended spirit photographer, during the examination to be held to-day in the Special Sessions Court-room. The following letter was received by Justice DOWLING in relation to female visitors to the examination:

NEW-YORK, April 18, 1869.

Hon. Judge Dowling:

The interest in the doctrine I believe and the request I desire to make must be my apology for taking the liberty of addressing you, in behalf of many of my sex who wish to be present at the examination on Wednesday next, being, we believe, relative to the "spiritual photo." We desire, without interfering upon your duties, that suitable accommodation may be granted to us of the "weaker sex" who wish to be present at this, the first time that our belief has been made the subject of judicial investigation. Let me say to you that a great responsibility rests upon you, in your decision, which will no doubt be given after a careful consideration of the subject, and be looked after by the "spiritual world" with more than ordinary anxiety. Trusting you will be equal to the emergency, I am spiritually yours, AMELIA V. BROOKS.

P. S.—During the pendency of the case I will take pleasure in addressing you upon the same as your peer, but for the present will leave the subject here.

The Second-avenue Section.

The directors of the Second-avenue Railroad, having determined to run their cars to-day at all hazards, applied yesterday afternoon to Superintendent KENNEDY for a force of Police, in order that the drivers engaged by the Company might have proper protection. Mr. KENNEDY granted the request, and gave the necessary orders through the telegraph for the off-platoons of the Fourth, Seventh, Tenth, Eleventh, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third and Twenty-ninth Precincts to report to-day to Captain TODD, of the Nineteenth Precinct, for duty along the line of the road and on the cars. This will make a force of about three hundred beats, and if the strikers or their friends cause any annoyance, there will no doubt be a serious disturbance. The strikers, however, will probably be sensible enough not to manifest any belligerent tendencies.

An Extensive Burglary.

On the night of the 31st of December last, or early on the morning of the succeeding 1st day of January, the extensive watch-case manufactory of Messrs. WHEELER, PARSONS & Co., Nos. 41 and 43 State-street, Brooklyn, and No. 5 Maiden-lane, New-York—the factory proper being in Brooklyn—was entered by some person or persons then unknown, and their large burglar and fire proof safe opened and gold watch-cases, gold in bars, silver in bars and in the shape of United States coin, stolen, valued in the aggregate at some $17,000 in currency. Part of the watch-cases taken were

LIFE ON A GUANO ISLAND.

How the Guano Trade is Conducted—Description of Baker's Island—Its Flora and its Fauna—How Ships are Moored in a Sand-Bank—Sharks and Cannibals.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BAKER'S ISLAND, Pacific Ocean, Friday, Jan. 15, 1869.

For eight months I have been a voluntary exile from society, and for two months of this time literally imprisoned in the centre of this vast Pacific Ocean, upon this sterile but not inhospitable spot of sand. I cry out at the ocean, but with different emotions from those of XENOPHON'S Ten Thousand when they first caught sight of the sea.

Eight weeks are the last vessel of the guano fleet, the brigantine Josephine, sailed away for Honolulu, taking the laborers and the Superintendent of the island, and leaving me with one faithful Kanaka to perform the lonely duty of guarding the property until the reopening of the busy season, in May or June.

Passing whalers sometimes lie to in the offing, and, if the surf is not too furious, put off a boat and come ashore, supplying at present our only means of communicating with the world.

But let me give some account of the great industry carried on upon this remote patch of sand-covered reef, and describe the habits and manner of life of its human and brute inhabitants, its seafaring visitors, its colony of laborers, its flora and its fauna.

In various parts of the intertropical Pacific Ocean, rising but little above the crest of the huge breakers that threaten to overwhelm them, little sandy islets have been discovered, which have become important to the civilized world as furnishing that highly-valuable fertilizer known to commerce as guano. These islands are the breeding ground of countless myriads of sea birds, which have been the proprietors of the soil from time immemorial.

Baker's Island is one of these. It is situated in latitude 0° 0' 15" N., longitude 176° 32' 30" W. from Greenwich, and is, therefore, within a quarter of a mile of the Equator. It was discovered about the year 1818, by an American sea Captain, whose name it bears. In 1858 it became the property of the American Guano Company, and in 1857 it was surveyed by the United States ship St. Mary's, Commander CHAS. H. DAVIS. Previous to its coming into the possession of its present owners, it was occasionally visited by ships, chiefly sperm-whalers, that frequent these waters. A weather-beaten piece of timber, firmly planted in the ground, and bearing a rude but secure letter-box, still stands, like a beacon, upon the most prominent part of the island. For many years it served as a seaport office—a port of news exchange or station, where passing vessels left papers, letters and log-books, and thus received, now and then, crumbs of intelligence from the great world from which they had been so long shut out.

Not far from the Post Office box we find a single human grave, the resting-place of a sailor. His comrades, true to the human instinct which hesitates to commit its dead to the shifting tides of ocean, have laid over him even more than the classic handful of sand, as if to keep his soul from being driven from pillar to post in the world of spirits.

The greatest elevation of this island above the sea level is about thirty feet, and its extreme length about a mile and a quarter. Standing on the deck of the vessel, as you approach the spot where the island should be, you see a dazzling crest of gray sand, wreathed in a frostwork of breakers. The low outlines of the island, with its single framed house, and the flagstaff, upon which you soon see the Stars and Stripes of the Union, remind you of a rakish monitor with its turret. The air above the island is alive with birds, which swarm like the flies of Egypt's plague; and, as you near the shore, you hear, above the sound of the ocean, their discordant din, which is to echo in your ears by day and night as long as you remain upon the island.

Baker's Island is saucer-shaped, being elevated at the edges and depressed in the centre.

It is barricaded on all sides by a coral reef, which stretches out into the ocean and breaks the force of the incoming waves so that this frail sandwork is not swept away by the storms. Outside of the reef the downward trend of the island under water is so abrupt that an anchor will not grapple, but falls away toward the bottom of the deep ocean. For this reason it has been found necessary to anchor large can-buoys outside the reef, to which the guano-ships can moor themselves while receiving their cargoes. Each buoy is made fast by means of two iron cables. One of these cables attaches the buoy to a large sheet-anchor; the other passes from the shore along the bottom to the anchor, and prevents it from sliding down the steep declivity into unfathomable depths.

The island itself is of coral formation. It is a low reef, covered with sand, broken shells and fragments of coral, and has enough soil to support a stunted vegetation. This consists of a coarse grass, used for thatching huts; a hardy, succulent species of parsley, (Apium petroselinum;) a woody bush with pretty yellow flowers, called by the Hawaiians Ili-ma; a plant which has a tuberous root, resembling the four-o'-clock and that serves to fatten a colony of rabbits, and a vine bearing fragrant yellow flowers and troublesome thorns that are shaped like caltrops.

For seven or eight months in the year the trade wind blows steadily from the southeast, and the island can then be approached by vessels, and a landing effected with comparative safety on its western or leeward side. But during the rest of the year the winds are variable and tempestuous, and the surf rages with such violence as sometimes, for weeks together, to make landing, even in that most perfect of seagoing craft, the whaleboat, not only hazardous, but impossible. During this period, from November to March or April, the island is lashed by an angry and incessant surf, which even changes the contour of its coasts, wearing away portions of the sand beach from one side of the island, and building it up at other points. But this change is only temporary. The usual outline of the island is restored when the winds return to the southeast, their customary Summer quarter. During these months the island is inaccessible. All operations are suspended, proprietors and laborers sail away together, and the desolate spot reverts for a time to the undisputed dominion of the shrieking sea fowl.

Baker's Island is distant about 1,600 miles S. S. W. from Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, and about 2,500 miles west from the coast of Peru. The voyage from the port of Honolulu to Baker's Island occupies from three to four weeks. Vessels in pursuing this voyage have to pass through the "Doldrums," a belt of ocean, north of the Equator, which abounds in calms, variable winds, sudden squalls and rain-storms. It is not an uncommon thing for vessels in this region to find themselves surrounded by water-spouts—immense, funnel-shaped cylinders of mist and water, that seem to suck up the sea into the clouds, as they revolve and sway to and fro like weird spirits, under the influence of the shifting winds.

The "Doldrums," save at certain seasons of the year, do not extend so far south as Baker's Island, being bounded upon the south by the third degree of north latitude. This accounts for the selection of this spot by the sea-birds as a home; for here they are undisturbed by heavy rains during the process of incubation.

The vessels employed in carrying the guano are mostly first-class clippers of large tonnage. The measures of bringing a ship of 2,000 tons gracefully and accurately to one of the buoys, and securely mooring her to it, is a delicate operation in seamanship. Many an experienced sea Captain, while his ship is luffed up into the wind, has sat all quivering like the wings of a sea-bird about to alight, and when the buoy is almost under the tip of the bowsprit, has become blinded to the sight of the frightful reef for which his ship is making, and has "given an instant too soon, the order, "Back the forecpeak!" Consequently, falling off to leeward, he has been obliged to spend whole days in beating up to windward against an opposing current, to regain the ground which his precipitation had lost—an accident which counts the loss of larger fortunes, when the calculation or infirmity of a moment defeats the end of a life-long purpose.

THE GUANO DEPOSITS.

The guano deposits cover the central part of Baker's Island, and form a layer from six inches to three feet thick. It is a light-brown powder, without smell or any offensive property. In this respect it differs very greatly from the Chincha Island guano, which has a highly ammoniacal odor. This difference in quality is to be explained by two facts; first, that the Chincha guano is deposited in layers of immense depth; and, secondly, that at those islands it rarely or never rains—while at Baker's Island rain falls with considerable regularity at the changes of the moon; a fact which I commend to the attention of those who deny the moon's influence upon the weather. Thus the free ammonia is thoroughly washed out of the guano of Baker's Island, while it is retained in that of the Chinchas. This natural process of deodorization, however, but slightly affects the fertilizing properties of the guano.

Estimates of the amount of guano on Baker's Island differ. The highest is over 5,000,000 tons—the lowest about 250,000 tons, and this is probably a more correct estimate than the larger one. But the American Guano Company, who still actively work this mine of wealth, shipping from a hundred to one hundred and fifty tons daily during about seven months of the year, are fast reducing its amount.

LOADING UP.

The method of transferring this animal wealth from its native bed to the hold of the ship is as follows: A railway track is laid from the shore inland to some rich field. Here the guano is shoveled into stout canvas bags, which are then drawn on cars by mules or by the Kanakas to the landing-place at the shore. In its transit over the track the car passes over one of Fairbanks' scales, and its weight is accurately ascertained.

At the beach, each guano bag, weighing about a hundred pounds, is placed on the back of an athletic Kanaka, who bears it to a whale boat, which is drawn up sufficiently far upon the beach to escape the power of the surf. In smooth weather each boat will carry about a ton, but when the day is rough the load has to be reduced. While the boat is loading the crew stand up to their waists in the water, holding its head directly toward the surf, which beats furiously upon the beach, and would otherwise strike the side of the boat and swamp it. When all is ready the boatsteerer gives the order; each man gives the boat a powerful shove, jumps in, seizes his oar, throws it into its row-lock, and "gives way" with all his might. The deeply-laden craft, sunk in the water almost to its gunwales, cuts through the breaking surf which threatens to swamp it, and, to the wonder of the spectator, escapes into the open sea. Arrived at the ship, each bag is hoisted by appropriate tackling over the side of the vessel, and emptied into the hold.

These patient, hardy, dark-skinned Kanakas who dig and handle the guano, and ply the toilsome oar through boiling surf from sunrise to sunset, under the glare of an equatorial sun, are natives of the Hawaiian Islands, and are a remarkable race of people. Even such of them as come to the island the wasted victims of disease, soon develope, under the influence of system and regularity in food, sleep and labor, into splendid specimens of muscular energy. Their skin takes on a darker hue; and as they strip for a swim in the ocean, or for a ride on the foaming crest of the breakers, you would think you were gazing on a band of tawny gladiators. They live in tents or cabins on the island, and are supplied each day with an abundant ration of meat, an article of Hawaiian food called po-i, which is an excellent anti-scorbutic, and a gallon of fresh water—for there are no springs of water on the island, and, as in Venice, drinking-water is imported in casks. They are also allowed hard bread and molasses, and occasionally a plug of tobacco, their choicest luxury. In addition to this, they have the opportunity of replenishing their larder with fresh eggs and succulent young birds—a luxurious diet.

SHARKS AND CANNIBALS.

On Sunday, no unnecessary work is done on the island, for the natives have been taught to observe the day. They are, however, allowed to take a boat and go a fishing to the shoals upon the north side of the island, where fish are generally to be obtained in large quantities. Frequently a boat will return, after four or five hours, laden with fish of remarkable size and beauty, some of them weighing fifty or sixty pounds apiece. These fish are all taken with the hook. The bait used is the flesh of the birds of the island.

The color of one variety of these fish is as bright and beautiful a red as that of the gold-fish. But it is a greater treat to watch them swimming in their natural element, over beds of snow-white coral, then to eat them, as their excellent qualities do not fulfill the promise of their beauty. Like sunglass birds of gaudy plumage, they satisfy no sense but that of sight.

The ocean in this latitude is the haunt of a race of murderous sharks, who swarm about a ship with greedy and persistent devotion. These sharks are, by hereditary precivity, man-eaters; and the white man who comes within their reach is snapped at in an instant by a score of ravenous mouths. But, strange to say, a dark-skinned Polynesian will swim about in their midst and rarely be molested. I have seen a native of the Hawaiian Islands fearlessly jump from the bow of a ship into the midst of a "school" of these fellows, swim, with the end of a line in his mouth, to one of the buoys, and return to the vessel unhurt.

Whether there is a sort of Freemasonry between the sharks and the Kanakas, or whether the tastes of the shark are too fastidious, and not sufficiently cannibal to relish cannibal flesh, has not been satisfactorily explained. But the shark and the Kanaka are on the friendliest terms imaginable.

The flying-fish abounds in these waters. When pursued by the dolphin, their foe, whole schools of them may frequently be seen to leap out of the water and fly for several hundred yards, skimming along quite near the surface, and now and then gaining new velocity by striking the crest of a wave with their long, ray-like, pectoral fins. But this beautiful fish has enemies in the air as well as in the sea, and frequently its aerial flight is cut short by some fleet sea-bird that is ever on the alert to seize its prey.

THE FEATHERED INHABITANTS.

Among the chief objects of interest on Baker's Island to a visitor are the birds; and they are well worthy of study. The sea-fowl are at all times a noisy set, but at night, while the older ones are engaged in the quarrels of love-making, and the young are complaining over their scanty rations, the Babel of their chattering is destructive to the sleep of one unused to such disturbance.

During the first night of my stay on this forlorn spot, it seemed at times as if the house were besieged by innumerable tom-cats; then the tumult resembled the suppressed bleating of goats, and I heard noises as of bets grinding their teeth in rage; again it was the querulous cooing of doves, and soon the chorus was strengthened by unearthly screams, as of ghouls and demons in mortal agony. But on going forth into the darkness to learn the cause of this infernal serenade, all was apparently calm and serene, and the radiant constellation of the Southern Cross, with the neighboring clouds of Magellan, looked me peacefully in the face, while, from another quarter of the heavens, the Pleiads shed their "sweet influence" over the scene.

The most quiet time of night with the birds is about daybreak, when they seem to subside into "catnaps," preparatory to the labors of the day.

By day many of the birds range on tireless wing, over leagues of ocean, in quest of fish. But still the number of those that remain about the island is so great as to defy computation, and as you pass through their haunts, in some places they rise in such clouds as actually to darken the air above you.

The eggs of some of the birds are of fine quality, and are much esteemed by the Americans as well as the Hawaiians on the island. Those of a bird called the ne-e-ho are the most valued. This name is an imitative word, derived from the cry of this restless creature, and is applied to it by the Hawaiians, who have quick intuitions in onomatopoetic matters.

The ne-e-ho is a bird of moderate size bearing a strong resemblance to the plover. It is less phlegmatic and stupid than most of the other birds, and does not waste so much of its time in droning and courting and love-making.

Yet it is not undomestic in its habits. While the father is engaged in the business of the island, providing for the wants of the family by fishing, the mother is ever hovering near her half-fledged young, now inviting them to try their wings in flight, and now hustling them out of sight under some clump of brown grass, and teaching them to lie close in order to escape observation.

The nu-e-ko does not make its home on the guano fields, but prefers the sandy shingle nearer to the ocean. The plumage of its back is brown, spotted with gray, a color so nearly resembling that of the sand upon which it makes its nest, that it might almost escape detection. But, when danger approaches it rises on the wing, uttering its shrill, peculiar cry of "nu-e-ko! nu-e-ko!" and leaves its egg or its young to the tender mercy of the intruder. As it spurns the ground it shows its throat, breast and wings, lined with sheeny feathers, that glint in the sun like flakes of silver, while it whirls and curvets in the air. This bird is plain in its tastes, and for a nest is content with a simple hollow, scooped out of the sand, the warmth of which assists in the incubation of its speckled egg.

The gannet (sula bassana) is a bird of great power and beauty. The color of the grown bird is white, with wings that are tipped with black. It has a long sharp beak which is serrated and slightly curved at the end, a formidable weapon of attack as well as of defence. Its wings are of immense strength, and when fully spread, they span about seven feet from tip to tip. In their fishing expeditions they range for hundreds of miles from their nesting places, and late in the day ships in mid-ocean often see long files of them returning home like heavy-laden treasure-vessels speeding to port. This sight is regarded by seamen as a sure indication that land lies in the direction of the flight, though it may be scores of leagues away.

In regard to moral character, the birds of Baker's Island may be divided into two classes—those which make an honest living, and those which are robbers. The gannet stands at the head of the respectable birds, and is a thrifty and honest citizen of the air.

The representative of the thievish class is the frigate-pelican, or man-of-war hawk, (tachypetes aquilus.) This bird has a dense plumage of gloomy black, a light, wiry body, that seems made for fleetness, and wings of even greater spread than the gannet's. Its tail is deeply forked, its bill is long, sharp and viciously hooked. Audubon regards the frigate-bird as superior perhaps, in power of flight, to any other. It never dives into the ocean after fish, but will sometimes catch them while they are leaping out of the water to escape pursuit. It is often content to glut itself with the dead fish that float on the water, but it depends mostly, for a subsistence, upon robbing other birds. It is interesting to watch them thus occupied.

As evening comes on these pirates may be seen lying in wait about the island, for the return of the heavily-laden fishing-birds. The smaller ones they easily overtake and compel them to disgorge their spoils; but to waylay and levy black-mail upon those powerful galleons, the gannets, is an achievement requiring strategy and address. As the richly-laden gannet approaches the coast of his island home, he lifts himself to a great height, and steadily oars himself along with his mighty pinions, until he sees his native sands extending in dazzling whiteness below. Now sloping downward in his flight, he descends with incredible velocity. In a moment more he will be safe with his affectionate mate who is awaiting his return to the nest.

But all this time he is watched by the keen eye of the man-of-war hawk, who has stationed himself so as to intercept the gannet in his swift course.

With the quickness of thought the hawk darts upon him, and, not daring to attack boldly in front, he plucks him by the tail and threatens to upset him, or he seizes him at the back of his neck and lashes him with his long wings. When the poor gannet, who cannot maneuvre so quickly as his opponent, finds himself pursued, he tries to buy his ransom by surrendering a portion of his fishy cargo, which the hawk, sweeping down, catches before it has had time to reach the earth. If there is but one hawk this may be a sufficient toll, but if the unwieldy gannet is set upon by a number of these pirates, he utters a cry of real terror and woe, and, rushing through the air with a sound like a rocket, in his rapid descent, he seeks to alight on the nearest point of land, well knowing that when once he has a footing on terra firma not even the man-of-war hawk dare come near him.

The man-of-war hawk is provided about its neck and chest with a dilatable sack, of a blood-red color, which it seems to be able to inflate at pleasure. On calm days, about noon, when the trade wind lulls, giving place to a sea-breeze that gently fans the torrid island, these light, feathery birds may sometimes be seen at an immense height balancing themselves for whole hours without apparent motion on their outstretched vans.

Whether they are able to increase their specific levity by inflating their pouches with a gas lighter than the atmosphere, or whether they are sustained by the uprising column of heated air that comes in on all sides from the ocean, is a question I am unable to answer. While floating thus, this bird has its pouch puffed out about its neck, giving it the same appearance as though it had its throat muffled in red flannel.

The most unique and novel bird on the island is the tropic-bird or marlin-spike (Phaëton phœnicurus.)

Its wings are long and its flight very rapid. It is distinguished by two slender, tapering feathers, of rare beauty, which project like a long steering-oar from its wedge-shaped tail.

I cannot resist the temptation of alluding to one other bird that abounds here. It is the Mother Carey's chicken—(Thalassidroma Wilsonii)—an ocean butterfly—the pet and favorite of every true sailor. This bird is about the size of a chimney swallow. Its pretty ways and seemingly innocent affectations, are enough to win the heart of almost any one. The society and study of these birds is not without its inspiration.

PARAGUAY.

The Situation—Movements of Lopez—Affairs in Asuncion.

By the arrival in London of the Brazilian and River Plate mails, interesting news from Paraguay is at hand.

The Anglo-Brazilian Times says: "From Paraguay we hear that LOPEZ was at the central town of Paraguari, levying men in all directions, but he is believed to be very scant of munitions of war, although food was most abundant. The seat of Government is at Pirabebe, and the United States Envoy and various foreign Consuls were residing there. It is said the inhabitants of Concepcion sent a deputation to Asuncion asking for the presence there of a gunboat and some troops to protect them from LOPEZ; but the Provisional Generalissimo replied he had no orders and could not do so. The Allies are stationed to the number of 2,500 men at Asuncion, Luque, and Trinidade, with outposts to about twenty-five miles from Asuncion. The Brazilian Envoy had arrived at Asuncion, and it was purposed to establish a Provisional Government, but the Argentine Confederation has not sent their diplomatic representative to Asuncion. D. ADOLFEO RODRIGUES has been appointed the Envoy of the Uruguay Republic for the purpose provided for in the tripartite treaty of alliance against LOPEZ."

The Buenos Ayres Standard says: "Affairs in Asuncion have undergone no change since the arrival of the special Brazilian Envoy, Señor FAVERIOS. The Argentines are displaying much more activity than the Brazilians, and some expeditions despatched by General MITRE have resulted in bringing over one thousand families from the woods and mountains. LOPEZ, it is said, is in the neighborhood of Paraguari, and has a force of from 1,000 to 2,000 men. Deserters who have arrived at the Allied camp represent the women as employed at the mines making gunpowder, and most of the families at the present seat of LOPEZ'S Government, a small village in the mountains called Pirabebe; but there is nothing of a really authentic character known respecting the movements of LOPEZ. No dispatches have been received from the American Minister, General MCMAHON, or from any of the foreign Consuls up there, which has led to the belief that LOPEZ has intercepted all the dispatches sent. The American Minister Resident in Buenos Ayres, Hon. Mr. WORTHINGTON, has sent up the United States gunboat Wasp to be placed in communication with General MCMAHON. It is probable, therefore, that previous to the sailing of the next packet we may have reliable data from the headquarters of LOPEZ.

JAPAN.

End of the Struggle Between the North and the South—Withdrawal of the Neutrality Notifications.

By the arrival of the India and China mails in London, mail advices from Hong-Kong to Feb. 12, and late Japanese news were at hand.

The Japan Herald says that the most important event of the fortnight has been the appearance of notifications from the foreign representatives of England, France and Prussia, announcing the termination of the struggle between North and South, and the withdrawal of the Neutrality Notifications which were published last year. It adds: "Thus is the Mikado's victory virtually acknowledged, and the misguided men who remain yet in arms at Hakodate have now to learn that their cause is hopeless and their doom sealed. Few of their names are familiar to foreigners. Probably those of AIZEU, INEUMI and SENDAI only will be recognized. The life of the former is spared, but his territories are confiscated, and he is condemned to perpetual imprisonment; INEUMI is condemned to retirement, and a less fertile territory is given to his son; SENDAI is also condemned to seclusion at Yeddo; but one of his relations is permitted to succeed to his estates. The mercy that has been evinced by the present Government in the hour of their victory toward their vanquished rivals must carry with it a sense of admiration to those nations of the Western world who have attained their present political and commercial importance only after numerous revolutions, which have terminated in so many instances but amid wholesale political murders and seas of noble blood. Japan may indeed point with pride to the epoch of her history as a nation, and raise her head with honor among her more civilized sisters."

TEXAS AND MEXICO.

Telegraph Line Through Houston to the City of Mexico—American Colonies in Mexico.

From the Houston (Texas) Telegraph, April 10.

We are informed by Mr. JOHN HENRY BROWN, from Tuxpan—which lies 200 miles on the coast south of Tampico—that the wires are being put up between Vera Cruz and Tampico via Tuxpan, with the view of extending to Matamoras, on the United States boundary. The wires have been extended from Houston westward to Indianola. When the Mexican line reaches Matamoras, and the Texas line is extended to Brownsville, on the bank of the Rio Grande, the telegraphic communication between the City of Mexico, via Vera Cruz, will be complete not only with Washington and New-York, but with every capital of Europe, and even the far Indies.

We hope the Government will find a military necessity for closing the gap to the Rio Grande, in order to obtain the necessary telegraphic communication with its posts on that important border. Telegraphic lines from the United States to the City of Mexico will be but a precursor of railroad connections already contemplated.

We congratulate the young and vigorous American colony of the TUXPAN Valley upon the prospect of telegraphic communication with Texas and the outside world. We would tell these enterprising settlers that before their tropical fruit orchards of bananas, oranges, plantains and lemons, as well as coffee groves, are in good bearing condition, the Kansas road will be finished, connecting Houston with St. Louis, Chicago, and New-York by mail; and that a line of propellers, bringing tropical fruits from their settlement to Houston, for distribution throughout not only the Southwest, but the Northwestern towns also, will find profitable employment. So rapid are events in this field of American progress, that without the consummation of Mexican annexation—which is not at all improbable within that time—we hazard nothing in predicting that within five years telegrams from the Northwestern cities will order shipments of tropical fruits from the Tuxpan Valley—and in seven days, by steamer and rail, the fruit can be delivered from Tuxpan to Chicago on the great lakes of the North.

TUXPAN is the nearest tropical territory, and, if Americanized, will have a valuable trade with Houston, Galveston, and the railroad base of the roads from the Northwest.

THE BATTLE OF NEW-ORLEANS.

General Jackson's Use of Cotton Bales—A Contribution to History.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, April 11.

OUR venerable fellow-citizen, CHAS. HARROD, who lives among us in the quiet autumn of his life, honored and respected for his virtues and his good deeds, has furnished us with the following contribution to the history of our ever-glorious battle of the 8th of January, 1815.

It has been said that the generally received account of cotton bales were used as breastworks at that battle was a myth; and many other conflicting reports respecting them, have somewhat weakened men's trust in the assertions of written and printed history. It is well that there still lives a witness, whose personal connection with the use of the cotton gives him knowledge of its effectiveness and of the disposal of it; and that he has thus given to the world the facts to be treasured up and recorded in such future editions of existing histories, or future chronicles thereof, as may hereafter be published.

NEW ORLEANS, March 19, 1869.

Messrs. Editors of the Picayune:

GENTLEMEN: Understanding a discussion is now going on in England as to the number of bales of cotton that were used by order of General JACKSON in the lines, on the 8th of January, 1815, having some knowledge of that transaction, I am induced to hand you a copy of a note to a friend of mine, dated July 1, 1861, and that friend, I think, handed it to WILLIAM H. RUSSELL, Esq., one of the correspondents of the London Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, July 1, 1861.

DEAR SIR: At your request I hand you the following memorandum, showing the number of cotton bales sent to the American lines for use in 1814 and 1815. At that time I took notes relating to the matter, which notes were burned some years ago with my office.

After the battle on the night of Dec. 23, 1814, in which the Quartermaster-General, Colonel PIATT, was wounded, and at his request, I was ordered by General JACKSON to go into his office as his assistant.

About the 26th of December, 1814, an order was sent from headquarters to the Commissary-General to send to the lines, I think, five hundred bales of cotton; that order was placed in the hands of the writer to execute. At that time there were but few carts or drays in the city, and the roads leading from the city to the lines were so cut up and muddy that it was quite impossible to transport the cotton by land.

The brig Sumatra, belonging to CORNELIUS PAULDING, Esq., was laying at the levee at that time, partly loaded for France, having on board 297 bales cotton, shipped by Messrs. VINCENT NOLTE & Co.

A barge was hired and taken alongside of that brig, with orders to the brig to discharge the cotton into the barge, which was done; the 297 bales cotton were taken to the lines and there used, (I believe about the 28th or 29th of December, 1814.) No more cotton was sent to the lines at that or any other time.

At that time, the troops were busily employed throwing up the breastworks, and about 120 bales cotton were taken to build a magazine in the garden at head quarters (and near this place Judge JUDGE TOURO, Esq., received his wound.) The cotton placed in this magazine was covered with earth, which made it the form of a sugar-loaf. A part of the cotton was placed on end in the line, and a part in what was called the Half-Moon Battery.

During the battle, Jan. 8, 1815, and in subsequent bombardments, the enemy's balls passed through the bales of cotton, they offering but slight resistance. The bales used in the magazine answered a very good purpose, and were not much damaged by the bombarding.

After peace was made known, all the cotton remaining (some was lost) was gathered together by order of General JACKSON, and sold for the benefit of whom it might concern, and the Commissioners were passed by the Commanding General to determine in what way Messrs. NOLTE & Co. should be compensated for the 297 bales of cotton taken from the brig Sumatra and used at the lines, NOLTE & Co. to furnish the weights.

The Commissioners appointed were BENJAMIN MONGAN, PETER V. GUION and W. W. MONTGOMERY, all merchants and honorable men. The day the Commissioners met the price of cotton was fourteen cents per pound, and that price was awarded to Messrs. V. NOLTE & Co., and they received the money at that price. I do not recollect what the cotton taken from the mud and earthworks brought, but think about $8,000 for the lot.

Respectfully,

CHARLES HARROD.

A Philadelphia Electrocutionist, Who Said he was Engineered a Consul.

From the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, April 19.

For a long time past a gentleman well-known in this city—a man of means, of culture, of refinement—has been in the habit of pilfering various small articles from one of the largest and best-patronized of our wholesale and retail grocery stores. The firm, though fully aware of the theft, pass with them, hardly knowing what course, under the circumstances, to pursue. At length, however, patience set an end, they brought the matter to a culmination on Saturday last by having the gentlemanly thief arrested in the street. He was conducted back to the store, and there humiliated to disclose the articles he had been a few minutes previously stolen. These consisted of a box of cigars and divers other trivial things such as he had been accustomed to take. He then offered to pay a sum of money equivalent to the value of the articles he had stolen for two years past, on condition of being let up softly. The firm accepted his proposition, when he paid $200. The matter is now amicably settled, and all parties satisfied.

The kleptomaniac is a member of a large and celebrated political organization in this city, besides being connected with several societies. Through the influence of certain well-known politicians, his fast friends, he lately received an appointment from President GRANT as Consul to one of the European ports. It is understood that since the discovery of his "peculiarity," his appointment will be withdrawn, and his resignation sent in to the department, of which he is a member. Such things will happen sometimes.

The Murder Trials at Worcester.

From the Worcester (Mass.) Spy, April 17.

The murder trials which have occupied the attention of the public for the last few days closed yesterday. In the La Flamme case, the full reports of the trial which have been published, have informed the public of the nature of the evidence against the prisoners, and the verdict of acquittal was probably expected by a majority of those who were conversant with the facts. The evidence was entirely circumstantial, and although some of it bore hard upon at least one of the prisoners, it failed to satisfy the jury. Most of the evidence in this case was given through an interpreter, the witnesses and prisoners speaking Canadian French. The interpreter, Mr. GEORGE JACQUES of this city, had a difficult and important task, which he discharged in a manner highly satisfactory to the Court and counsel on both sides of the case.

The jury in the La Flamme case having retired, the Attorney-General moved that BARTHOLOMEW O'DOURNI be arraigned on an indictment found against him for the murder of HARPER MURRAY, at Milford, on the 31st of October, 1868. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. Messrs. P. EMORY ALDRICH, of this city, and HENRY B. FALES, of Milford, were formally assigned as counsel, they having heretofore been assigned by the friends of the prisoner. The impanneling of the jury was then proceeded with, the prisoner exercising his right of challenge. Twenty-one names were called before the required number was obtained. Mr. ALDRICH, senior counsel of the prisoner, addressed the Court, stating that in view of all the facts in the case, and after consultation with the prisoner and his friends, he had advised the prisoner to retract his plea of not guilty, and to plead guilty of murder in the second degree. The Attorney-General accepted the plea, and moved that the sentence provided by law be passed upon the prisoner, and he was accordingly sentenced to imprisonment in the State Prison for the remainder of his natural life, one day to be solitary. The prisoner received the sentence without emotion.

Extensive Fire in Morristown, N. J.—Fruit Trees Destroyed.

From the Newark Journal, April 19.

A fire was discovered yesterday on the premises of Mr. SHEEDER, in Morristown. The flames had got well under way before they were seen, and swept with great rapidity over the grounds, upon which had accumulated the heavy crops of grass of the last two or three Summers, consuming everything in its course. The grounds surrounding the mansion comprise several acres, profusely ornamented with shade and fruit trees of the finest species. These were, of course, utterly destroyed, to the number of one thousand or more, and with them the stables belonging to the place. By the exertions of the neighbors, however, the house was saved. We have not heard the loss estimated, but it can hardly be less than $10,000.

The premises were uninsured, as they have been for two or three years past, since the death of Mr. SHEEDER'S wife. This gentleman now resides in New-York, but would suffer no one to occupy or trespass upon the estate, which has been kept locked, the grass being left to grow out, but allowed to accumulate upon the ground year after year. Burglars have more than once broken into the house, and one man is now serving a term in State Prison for this offence. It is believed that the conflagration was caused by boys, who set fire to the grass. In addition to the property above enumerated, an ice-house was destroyed.

Statement from Senator Cameron.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 17.

Senator CAMERON authorizes an unqualified denial of the published statements about his opposition, in Executive Session, to the confirmation of Ex-Governor CURTIN to the Russian mission. He made no opposition to a favorable report by the Foreign Relations Committee. When the subject came up in the Senate he did not, as stated, make a bitter speech against Mr. CURTIN, but said that while Governor CURTIN was not recommended by the Representatives of his State, and, in his own opinion, was not the choice of the Republican Party of the State, yet as he had been nominated by the President he should not oppose his confirmation nor vote against it. He made no assault upon Governor CURTIN'S character as alleged. He did not call for a division, and none was taken, the nomination being unobserved, and there is consequently no truth in the story that some sixteen or seventeen Senators voted against CURTIN'S nomination.

Important Lawsuit in Kentucky.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal, April 11.

A suit in equity has just been commenced in the Federal Court at this place, which involves the title to and control of the property and funds of the Centre College of Kentucky. There are two sets of trustees, each claiming to be the lawful trustees of the College. One set was elected by the Assembly Synod of Kentucky, and the other by the Anti-Assembly Synod. Upon the Assembly side there are three trustees who are non-residents of Kentucky. The action is brought in their names, all the other trustees, on both sides, being made defendants. The object of the action is to settle the question as to which body of trustees has the right to control and manage the property, funds and franchises of the College. The amount in controversy is said to be over $200,000. HARLAN & NEWMAN and BRIENON & WHARTON represent the complainants.

A suit is now pending in the Boyle Circuit Court which probably raises the same or some of the same questions.

Brownlow and Johnson.

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Whig says there was a postscript to the card from Senator BROWNLOW in relation to the $1,500 contributed by ANDREW JOHNSON toward the reestablishment of the Senator's newspaper. This postscript, the Whig says, is as follows:

P. S.—While Military Governor, Mr. JOHNSON made large assessments upon the rich rebels of Middle Tennessee, and compelled them to pay over to him thousands of dollars. As he is undertaking to explain what he did with other moneys, those rebel contributors would like to know what has been done with the money wrenched from them at the point of the bayonet.

W. G. B.

FOREIGN HAMS.—Through the kindness of a correspondent, well known in botanical circles, we have had an opportunity of examining a remarkable specimen of prepared meat, stated to be a "portion of a Westphalian ham," sold in London for 16s., as an article of food. The slice is about one inch square and one-third of an inch in thickness, weighing considerably less than half an ounce. It could readily be swallowed as a single mouthful. From its odor and appearance, we should say that the only "smoking" it has undergone is such as would be imparted by a few hours' immersion in a solution of creosote. At all events, the muscular fibres have a glistening, fresh, carneous look, their transparency strongly contrasting with thinly-scattered fat masses, with tendenous and aponeurotic fibres, and more especially with a number of small cysts, some of which lay beneath the cuticle, these cysts, of which we have removed no less than twenty without breaking up the slice, contain each of them a larva of the well-known pork tapeworm, better understood as the Cysticercus cellulosæ. On microscopic dissection, the latter were found to be alive; their characteristic hooklets, suckers and corpuscles being all well formed. As we have probably not removed more than half the number of mesalle vesicles present in this precious morsel, it would be safe to say that the "mouthful," if swallowed in the condition in which we received it, would give rise to the formation of more than thirty tapeworms in the intestinal canal of the person who ate it. That such meat should ever be sold, in any civilized country, much less in London, our English hams are free from these parasites. The small white chalky deposits, which one often sees in them, are formed during the salting and smoking of the flesh. Their irregular form, with a size varying from that of a mean speck to one, two, or more lines in length, at once reveals their true character. Nevertheless, these soft secretions are often mistaken either for sickness capsules, or more commonly, for degenerated and calcified measles.—British Medical Journal.

A ROBIN SHOT.—Early this morning a sentimental, but somewhat noisy robin, was killed in Tremont-street for uttering seditious notes. Perched on an eminence, it denounced an honest woodman for not spacing a hundred-year old tree. In easily-translated bird-language it sang thus:

Oh day, Oh day, Oh woeful day! Oh tree, Oh tree, Oh beautiful tree! Spared by lightning, storm and blight, but crushed by human force! Oh ax, Oh ax, Oh cruel ax! how sharper than a serpent's tooth, how harder than thy wielder's heart! Didst thou not hear the pitcous shrieks that proceed from thy blow as blow on blow fell thrills of horror through thy victim's veins? Why didst thou not refuse to do the deed, and shame thy fell commander?

Load, cap, aim, fire, click, flash, bang! and all was over. A little bird, shot through and through, fell lifeless to the ground.—Boston Transcriber.

BUSINESS FAILURE.—Great surprise and regret was occasioned yesterday in business circles in this city, by the announcement of the failure of the house of JAMES ROOSEVELT & Co., commission merchants in wool and cloths. It is understood that their liabilities are nearly $600,000. Both gentlemen possess the respect and esteem of the community in an eminent degree, and they will have general sympathy in their business misfortune.—Utica Herald, April 17.

FLEXIBLE STONE.—Mr. GARDNER, the Secretary of the Mount Gambier Institute, informs us that he now has in his possession the piece of flexible stone of which we gave our readers a description some months ago, and an account of which we had transferred from a Boston paper. The Mount Gambier Standard also says respecting it: "Mr. GARDNER, the Secretary of the Institute here, has kindly shown us a piece of stone from the Himalaya Mountains, which possesses the property of flexibility to such a remarkable degree as to excite astonishment. It is about nine inches long, by about one inch and a quarter wide, and nearly half an inch thick, and is of a light salmon color, making a cracking sound, when shaken. This piece was sawn from a larger block then in the possession of Major TULE, who subsequently presented the curiosity to the Edinburgh Museum. Only one other piece is known to be in England, in the possession of the authorities of the British Museum; and the peculiar character of the stone has excited the attention and inquiry of geologists, but without leading to an elucidation of its mysterious qualities. Mr. GARDNER received this extraordinary curiosity by the last mail from Bombay, where he had left it in charge of a relative."—Adelaide Observer.

Issue restricted to $1,700,000 on the entire road, which is equal to about $15,000 per mile. This road is now approaching its completion; it traverses a rich and populous district in the State of Indiana, and will soon constitute an important link in the Trunk Line, extending from the Atlantic cities to the Southwest, via Cairo.

The intrinsic value of the real itself, combined with the guarantee of four other important railroad companies, one of which ranks financially among the strongest railroad corporations in the world, render these bonds among the safest investments on the market.

We confidently recommend them as a most desirable security for parties investing for themselves or in trust for others.

Also, Shares in the Capital Stock of said Railway Company, on which Six per Cent. per annum and one half the net earnings of the road, in excess of that amount, is guaranteed to the holders in perpetuity by the same railroad corporations.
